MANY STUDENTS GRADUATE FROM DISTRICT SCHOOLS

Every year, for thirty-one years, the Jefferson schools have ended in happiness for the children, satisfaction for the teachers and congratulations from nearly all the people of the district comprising Daly City, Colma and Lawndale.

One reason why such has been the constant complimentary result is, reasonable regard for common sense ever has been the prevailing policy.

Popular fads and fancies are always recognized, to a certain extent, but never permitted to sway the minds of teachers and pupils so that they wander away from the pathway that leads to real accomplishments. Consequently, when the time of promotion comes, everyone feels that a real step forward has been made all along the line.

On last Friday in the forenoon the District Superintendent appeared before every class and embraced the opportunity to say that it was his great pleasure to commend the children and their teachers for the advancement they had made. This he could say in all sincerity, for the evidence was easily discernible to even the dullest mind. It was an exhibit all convincing that pleased beyond expression.

Such a condition is real success for both teachers and pupils, especially while passing through a period, when so much experiment in education is the vogue that in too many localities a sort of bewilderment prevails. It is commendable to dream a little, but plain education must not be neglected altogether.

The rule of giving the young learner a real foundation to the extent of the individual ability has been followed with patience and the result is development of mind, expression and body, according to the age, despite the vagaries of idealists. During the year one hundred and thirty-six graduates have been sent forth to the high school, one hundred and three at this closing, and thirty-three last January. Nearly every one of these is capable of going farther forward if he or she continues to have the good fortune of receptive teachers; otherwise not a few will falter, fall by the wayside, or go drifting to land, no one knows where.

The graduates of the recent tests are located as follows: Crocker Tract, 42; Woodrow Wilson, 28; and Jefferson (Colma), 33.

Of these the leaders were: Crocker Tract, Muriel Grisler; Woodrow Wilson, Frances Pope; Jefferson (Colma), a tie, Bernice Bertini and Aleprondo Biagini. Each leader was awarded, through the generosity of the Good Angel, a recognition of five dollars.

Two graduations were necessary in order to accommodate all, one by the Crocker Tract school under the direction of Mrs. Josie S. Frary, and the other by the Woodrow Wilson and Jefferson schools, under the direction of Mrs. Ella Loomis and Miss Marie H. Traynor. Both programs were pronounced very interesting by the numerous friends who were present in both large gatherings. Those who spoke knew their pieces and every word could be heard. The music and the singing were well selected and presented in a pleasing way.

District Superintendent W. J. Savage presided at both graduations and helped to keep events happening so that no one was disappointed. The elequent and ever ready to oblige Judge Cutler of Burlingame spoke and was apprepciated, at the Woodrow Wilson-Jefferson graduation.

The following are the names of the graduates:

Crocker Tract

Roelof Pauw, Helen Manseau, Ray Gomes, Evelyn Clark, Arthur Alcione, Evelyn Core, Muriel Grisler, Helen Schmalz, Roy Kelly, Anna Regan, Sharles Sheridan, Fiorini Bartoli, Joe Scalia, James McKell, Evelyn Owens, Henrietta Norry, Leland Walde, Hilarie Raiff, Louise Terramorse, Eveline Rancatore, Helen Menge, Anita Gray, Adelaide Schmidt, Betty Simpson, Eva Schulba, Victor Delgado, Clarence Anderson, Myrtle Augustien, Grace Boyle, Marian Mansfelt, Clytie Clonsky, Pearl Smith, Robert Barbee, Fred Bostock, George Conrad, Harry Elbert, Wilfred Franklin, Frank Gordon, Walter Hanschen, Aubrey Huntington, James Martin, Beatrice Cuneo.

Woodrow Wilson

Jasper Armstrong, Loretta Duffy, Dominic Compani, Yolanda Francesconi, John Denk, Nella Gabriellini, Harold Hackerson, Janette Gettle, Harry Hershel, Loretta von Hofen, James Kennedy, Belle Hogan, Eugene Keip, Helen Lewis, George MacDonald, Marline Parker, Charles Munday, Elmo Peck, Oscar Nelson, Frances Pope, Attilio Pastorini, Le Vonne Rogers, Roland Petrocchi, Henrietta Vujevich, Frank Ramezzano, Maxine Welter, Elwin Smith, Frank Torres.

Jefferson (Colma)

Aleprondo Biagini, Guido Marlini, Bernice Bertini, Angelo Casentini, James Berady, Palmera Toso, James Kennedy, Assunta Guastavino, Anson Bianchini, Josephine Maffei, Ada Micheletti, Carl Grossman, Peter Lera, Paul Guisti, Auggie Gaggero, Fred Bertetta, Frank Olcese, Enrico Pagelli, Evelyn Molinari, Lena Gianni, Alba Botto, Sylvio Perata, Helen Lucchesi, Angelo Tuvo, Valentine Ciardella, Sylvio Bollentini, Don Funge, Joseph Franzoia, Ernest Schenone, Almondo Chiappari, Nello Barsi.

During the year ending June 30, forty-four teachers, including district superintendent, five principals, one domestic science and one manual training director have been employed. In addition the service of a district nurse has been maintained. The cost of all the schools of the district for the year was $90,398.48, including $6,473.94 for permanent improvements. The cost of educating each child was $63.

LOCAL EAGLES WIN CUP AT REDDING

The Colma-Vista Grande Aerie of Eagles carried off the honors at the convention held in Redding, in the contest of drum corps. Headed by Mr. Connally as drum major, and William Bolger as manager, the nattily uniformed group was the cause of applause all through the parade, and frequent calls were made for private demonstrations of their ability and accurateness in executing difficult formations. The voting was unanimous, and was enthusiastically received by the population of Redding and by those who witnessed the parade.

The cup that was won is to be held one year by the winning team, and if the same team wins it for three consecutive years, the cup is to be held permanently.

Colma-Vista Grande Aerie is in possession of a display case full of cups and emblems won at conventions, and one in particular that is the pride of the lot was won at the national grand convention at Denver in 1927.

Daly City and Colma should be proud of such representation—not only because of the honor brought to our city, but because of the advertising qualities of such success.

As an after thought, would it not be fitting that the citizens turn out some evening and have the drum corps demonstrate the technique that has made them the winning team?

At the last meeting of the Aerie an impressive Memorial service was held for all departed brothers. Eighty members have passed away since the charter was received. Mr. James Kennedy, vice-president, presented the Aerie with a beautifully framed parchment of scroll with the names of the departed inscribed. Two candidates were initiated at the same meeting.

JEFFERSON ALL STARS MEET FIRST DEFEAT

The Jefferson All Star baseball team was unable to maintain their winning pace, losing their first game in twelve starts last Sunday to Ocean View, by the score of 10-9. The game was marrd by erratic umpiring and several heated discussions by members of both teams, as well as the spectators.

Although the All Stars were defeated, they garnered a total of nineteen hits, which were sufficient to win almost any ball game. But the most essential quality the team needed was lacking. A quota of six Jefferson men were picked off the bases.

Both teams were determined to win and the game was close and hard fought throughout. Keagle helped the cause along, hitting a home run with two men on the sacks in the sixth inning. L. Kennedy and O. Nystrom both collected three ply swats. The All Stars had two men on in the ninth inning, with two out, but Plansky was not equal to the occasion, flying out to the center fielder, ending the ball game.

This Sunday the team will journey to South San Francisco to meet the Italian-American team at 2 o'clock, and attempt to redeem the defeat from the strong Ocean View aggregation last Sunday. All the baseball fans who wish to witness the game are welcome.

PAVLOS ADDS ANOTHER CUP TO HIS COLLECTION

Peter Pavlos added another silver cup to his collection on June 13, when he was victor in the San Francisco Scottish Rite golf tournament, held at the California golf course at Baden. Peter entered at a moment's notice, but was in great form and walked away with the silver cup, which will be formally presented to Daly City's champion golf player by the tournament committee. Peter won a silver cup in a previous tournament conducted by the San Francisco Scottish Rite.

Welcome

PLANS TO BREAK THE BOTTLE-NECK

The Daly City highway "bottle-neck" problem is to be tackled by the State Highway Commission, it is announced.

Immediate investigation of the serious traffic congestion that occurs at Daly City and Colma, on the main route of travel between San Francisco, peninsula points and San Jose, will be undertaken by the State Highway Engineer, C. H. Purcell.

Announcement that arrangements are being made for a traffic study at this point was made by Purcell in a letter to H. J. Brunnier, president of the California State Automobile Association. The Daly City "bottle-neck" was called to the attention of the State Highway Department by the president of the motorists' organization, who suggested a conference of state, San Francisco, Daly City and San Mateo conuty officials.

"The congetsion which occurs at Daly City on Sundays and holidays is serious and the increase in traffic of this artery indicates that this congestion will soon become common on week days," said Brunnier. "The condition is one for which no one person or set of officials is responsible. It is one of those situations in which many agencies interested have failed to get together."

POPULAR LOCAL COUPLE UNITED IN MATRIMONY

St. Maximus church was the scene of a pretty wedding last Saturday evening at 9 o'clock, when Miss Kathleen Rose Buckley, of Broomis Terrace, became the bride of Mr. William Glenn Haywood, of Brunswick street, Daly City. The Rev. Father James Donohoe conducted the ceremony.

The bride was most beautifully gowned in white taffeta, with a veil of tulle which fell from a cap of lace trimmed with pearls and orange blossoms. She carried a bouquet of gardenias, bride's roses and lilies of the valley. She was given in marriage by her father, Mr. Maurice Buckley. The maid of honor, Mrs. Margaret Warman, sister of the bride, wore a yellow taffeta gown. She carried pink roses. The bridesmaids were Louise Klein, dressed in a pink taffeta gown, and Flora Palleti, who wore an orchid taffeta gown. They carried red roses. The best man was Leonard Ransom, and the ushers were Walter Warman and Jack Klein. Pretty little Lois Jane Tackman acted as flower girls. She wore a peach taffeta dress and carried a basket of pink and white sweet peas.

Following the ceremony a reception was given the bride and groom at the home of the bride's father.

DALY CITY MERCHANTS TO PLAY AT REDWOOD

The proposed game between the Daly City Merchants baseball team and the Redwood Y. M. I. team was called off last Sunday, owing to the rain. The game is to be played this Sunday, June 23, on the Redwood City grounds, at 2 p. m. The Merchants now have a well balanced team and expect to give any of the teams a real struggle. Randall, Maloney and Sloan, three of the Merchants' new players, have added plenty of strength to the team.

"WHAT MUST I DO TO BE SAVED?" TEXT OF SERMON

Rev. John R. Stevenson, pastor of Grace Presbyterian church, will preach on the text, "What Must I Do to be Saved?" next Sunday. The regular Sunday service is held at 8 o'clock every Sunday evening. A special installation service will be observed on the afternoon of Sunday, June 30, at 3 o'clock. Further announcement will be given later.

WILL BEGIN WORK ON COAST ROAD

A joint celebration of the Salada Beach Chamber of Commerce and the Coastside Civic Union is being planned for July 14, to honor the initiation of work on the new tri-county highway which is to be built and owned jointly by San Francisco, San Mateo and Santa Cruz counties.

Word that work is to start on this scenic route, which will connect San Francisco and Santa Cruz with a direct coastal road, has been received in a message from San Francisco Supervisor Andrew J. Gallagher, who is chairman of Highway District No. 9, reporting that the new road, which will run through Salada Beach, will be started not later than August 15.

Bonds totaling $643,000 are to be issued to cover the building of the road, Gallagher's report stated, and are to be owned in the ratio of: San Francisco county 55 per cent; San Mateo county 30 per cent; and Santa Cruz county 15 per cent.

The Coastside Civic Union, which will join with Salada Beach in celebrating this progressive step for Northern California, represents all towns of San Mateo county on the Pacific side.

Thousands of coastside residents are expected to attend the affair, which will be in the form of a beach barbecue on Salada Beach, to be followed by competitive sports.

The Salada Beach baseball team and a team representing the Coastside Civic Union will vie for honors.

NOVENA ATTRACTS THOUSANDS TO ST. MAXIMUS DURING WEEK

The Novena in honor of Our Lady of Perpetual Help has attracted thousands of the devoted clients of the Blessed Virgin to St. Maximus church in Daly City during the week. They have come to kneel at Her shrine, to pray before the miraculous picture that has come from Rome. With a background of golden silk the shrine is beautiful to behold, especially in the evening when lit by the floodlights which set off the thousands of flowers which surround Our Lady's picture.

On next Sunday, June 23, the feast of Our Lady of Perpetual Help, the miraculous picture will be carried in public procession in thanksgiving for the many hundred favors that have been recorded during this Novena. The Novena prayers will be recited and the hymns sung by the whole congregation. Following the public procession the Papal blessing, to which is attached a plenary indulgence, will be conferred on all present by the Reverend Edward Power of the Redemptorist order. The procession will commence promptly at 3 p. m. After the afternoon service and the evening service which commences at 8 p. m., the flowers which have been used for the decoration of the shrine will be blessed and distributed with other souvenirs of the Novena.

FIFTEEN HUNDRED ATTEND FUNERAL OF OFFICER BOND

More than 1,500 persons, officials and friends from all over the state, stood with bared heads in the rain about the San Bruno home of Leland Stanford Bond, World war veteran, where funeral services were conducted for him last Saturday morning under the auspices of San Mateo Post No. 2, American Legion, at 9:30.

Lee Bond, as he was known to his friends, was killed in the line of duty late Wednesday afternoon of last week as he was pursuing a speeder through San Bruno. Bond was known as a fearless officers and an honest friend, and the hundreds of persons who swarmed about the little home in San Bruno grieved with the rest of the state and county over the death of Leland Stanford Bond.

ODDS AND ENDS OF WEEK'S NEWS

Ali Pacific coast sites submitted for location of the contemplated $5,000,000 navy dirigible base, including the proposed site of 500 acres at San Mateo, will be inspected by a special investigating board.

Charles C. Benson, aged 63, pioneer contractor of Redwood City, retired for several years, died last Friday at his Redwood City home, following a lingering illness.

Telegrams to Secretary of War Good have been sent by directors of the San Carlos Chamber of Commerce endorsing Brewer Island site, San Mateo, for location of a Pacific coast army air base and asking favorable consideration of the offer.

Members of the San Mateo county bar and county and city officials from all parts of the Peninsula gathered with other leading citizens at San Mateo last Saturday to pay final tribute to the memory of Attorney Joseph Byron Gordon, laid to rest after impressive rites of the Masonic order.

Damage of more than $200,000 was done at El Centro by a fire which for a time threatened the entire business and industrial section.

Strengthening of border inspection and federal co-operation with Mexico are moves considered in California's fight to keep out the Mediterranean fruit fly. The recommendations were made by the regional advisory council of the California Development Association.

Frank Meyers, charged with violating his probation which he was given when he pleaded guilty of driving an automobile while under the influence of liquor, was sentenced to serve four months in the county jail in Redwood City by Judge George H. Buck.

James Barry, aged 59, the Peninsula's school burglar caught in Redwood City, faces a prison term of one to 15 years in San Quentin. He was sentenced by Superior Judge George H. Buck when he pleaded guilty to the charge of second degree burglary. Barry entered and robbed schools of the Peninsula for many months before he was caught acccording to his confession.

A city manager for Redwood City, as provided by the new charter, will be selected from thirteen applications now in the hands of Mayor Beeger, and will be installed in office by July 2.

Thomas J. Jones, of Hillsborough, noted mining engineer and one of the best known men in San Mateo county, shot and killed himself at the Camp Seco copper mine in Northern California. Jones had been suffering from a nervous breakdown.

Burlingame's new planning commission, created by the new zoning ordinance adopted at the last session of the council, was appointed by Mayor Buck last Monday and approved by the rest of the councilmen. Two women were named as members of the commission.

Mrs. Emily L. Jones, Eureka's woman candidate for mayor, has deeated Arthur W. Way, who had served two terms as mayor.

Ordered to "walk the plank" by his two playmates who held him captive in a game of "Pirate," Joseph Figuero, aged 9, was drowned when he stepped from a raft into deep water in the Los Angeles river.

Joseph Laurent, aged 33, died at Tulare from injuries received several days previous when he was kicked in the chest by a horse.

Governor Young has signed the bill revising rates of exemption under California's inheritance tax act, and establishing work shops and salesrooms for aiding blind persons to become self-supporting.

San Mateo county supervisors have declined to pay a bill of $6,496 for paving in the Visitacion Valley district, according to a suit filed in the Superior Court at Redwood City. The action was filed by the Hanrahan Paving Company of San Francisco, and asks a court order to force payment of the bill.

Peaches will sell for four times as much this year as they did last year, the California Peach Canning Association has announced.

A call for a conference of the seven San Joaquin valley counties to discuss mutual irrigation problems has been sent out by the Fresno chamber of commerce. Representatives will meet at Fresno on June 28.

BERESFORD SEWER SYSTEM OPPOSED BY SALT COMPANY

Opposition to Beresford's proposed new sewer system was revealed in a communication filed last Monday with the county board of supervisors by the Leslie California Salt Company.

The contemplated sewer would have an outfall in Seal slough, just south of San Mateo. If the request is granted by the board, according to the salt company, "great and irreparable damage will be done" to the concern.

"We hope that you will deny any application made and not require us to take protective measures in the courts," read the letter, which was signed by S. D. Adams, vice-president and treasurer of the Leslie California Salt Company.

Representatives of the Beresford Development Association will appear before the board on July 1 and request the formation of a sewer district for construction of a new sewer system in that community.

The city of San Mateo is interested in the matter, as that city contemplates annexing Beresford to San Mateo in the near future, it is understood.

R. H. Brotherton was given permission to attach a water pipe to the county's water main leading to the Memorial park.

The sum of $240 per month was appropriated for traveling expenses for five field deputies for rodent control.

Paul Perussina, of South San Francisco, was recommended to succeed the late Leland S. Bond on the county traffic squad by the board of supervisors. Perussina's name will be forwarded to the State Motor Vehicle department, as the appointment must come from that office.

HALF MOON BAY WILL CELEBRATE FOURTH

The committee in charge of the Fourth of July celebration to be held at Half Moon Bay reports great progress in their work, and expect that the celebration will be attended by large crowds of patriotic people from all corners of San Mateo county.

Horace W. Amphlett, of the San Mateo Daily Times, has been secured as speaker of the day. A number of floats will be entered in the parade, which will be one of the features of the celebration. The local Boy Scouts will march in the parade, which will be enlivened by three bands. The bands expected to take part are the Half Moon Bay band, the Hayward American Legion band, and the San Mateo Sciots band.

A monster barbecue will be served at noon to the thousands of visitors who are expected, and the great open air concert will be executed by the united bands.

KNIGHTS OF COLUMBUS INITIATE LARGE CLASS

Daly City Council No. 2712, K. of C., held its regular meeting last Tuesday evening. An unusually large group of members was on hand to welcome twelve candidates into the Council as first degree Knights. Golden Gate Council officers exemplified the degree work in an expert manner.

The date set as June 23 for exemplification of the second and third degrees has been changed to July 7, due to the Novena which is being held in the local parish. After the meeting and initiation light refreshments were served.

YOUNG PEOPLE INVITED TO B. Y. P. U. MEETINGS

Come and play ball in a church auditorium in a new way. You will be all pepped up over it, the same as those who played the opening game last Sunday evening. We will have another game this Sunday. You are invited to come, and you can play. The discussion of the meeting will be on "Jesus Teaching Self-control." Good leaders have self-control. If you want to be a young leader, B. Y. P. U. holds great opportunities for you. The time of the meetings is 6:45, and the place is Calvary Baptist Mission, 5724 Mission street, just below Oliver. You are invited, and we take special pride in making strangers welcome.

GARDENER ACCIDENTALLY SHOT IN WRESTLING MATCH

John Souza, a gardener at Colma, is in the South San Francisco hospital, suffering from a gunshot wound in the knee, incurred last Saturday morning. Souza, with another gardener, wrestled in fun with a large revolver after a card game at a ranch house, when the gun suddenly exploded and Souza was wounded. His condition is not critical.

THE SKIPPER COMES ASHORE

CHAPTER I—PART 9

Cape Mendocino consists of a bold, mountainous headland; the seaward face being a steep, rocky precipice; the shore side extending inland in a series of rolling, grass-covered hills. Numerous reefs and sunken ledges, running far out to sea, allow great opportunity for a display of "white water" and curling combers—and are also responsible for this region bearing the reputation of being one of the most dangerous spots of navigation for ships plying the western shores of our country. Heavy swells, adverse winds, sunken reefs, and heavy fogs necessitate extreme caution on the part of Skippers rounding this point.

Descending a steep grade we enter a beautiful fertile valley—a picture of green fields and prosperous ranches, interspersed with dark patches of redwoods and divided by the Eel River. In the heart of this valley lies Ferndale—the neatest and homiest town yet encountered on our cruise. Its white houses, green roofs, and gardens of beautiful flowers provide a most restful scene; while numerous flagpoles betray the fact that many a retired sea captain has chosen this spot as a dwelling place after retiring from the sea.

Speaking of homes: I wager I can pick out nine out of ten homes inhabited by sea-faring men, either because of their general ship-shape appearance, their flag poles and ships trimmings, or because of their coating of blue-white paint—a peculiar shade used for marine purposes, and many gallons of which must be annually charged on the red side of the Company's ledger in order that their Skippers, Mates and Chiefs may enjoy the reputation for maintaining sea worthy homes.

Ferndale is noted for its position in the heart of a wonderfully rich and fertile farming and dairying section. The excellent soil and the abundance of rain pays tribute in the form of luxurious vegetation and a bountiful supply of dairy products.

This should be as good a time as any for a brief insight into the past and present of Humboldt county, which we entered just north of Usal on the rough and rugged coast road.

Humboldt county extends over some thirty-six hundred square miles of territory; the greater part of it being mountainous, but with many rich valleys adaptable to agriculture and dairying. This territory was created a county on May 12, 1853, and was named by Captain Ottinger, of the ship Laura Virginia, in honor of Baron Alexander Humboldt, the scientist. Located in the far northwestern portion of the state, and separated from Oregon by Del Norte county, it extends southward some one hundred and eight miles, with an average width of thirty-five miles. Its sea coast is rough and rugged, presenting a bold and uninviting aspect to the mariner, with the exception of Humboldt Bay—a very fine landlocked harbor of whose history and advantages more will be told in a future chapter.

The development of Humboldt county's vast natural resources is but recent history. Very few counties of the state can boast so great a store of potential possibilities. The chief industry of the county is lumbering. Humboldt is world-renowned for its redwood forests, leading, as it does, all other counties in the standing area of this timber; while its output of lumber and kindred products enjoys an equal reputation. In addition to the great redwood belt, there are considerable forests of pine, spruce, oak, madrone, and fir; while its streams are bordered with groves of maple, pepperwood, and cottonwood in commercial quantities. Scientific reforestation is solving the problem of timber supply for future generations.

WISCONSIN TELEPHONE FECILITIES EXTENDED

Telephone facilities were greatly increased in the state of Wisconsin during the year 1928. A new toll cable was opened between Milwaukee and Madison, many toll lines were reconstructed, a new long distance cable was built between Lake Geneva and the Wisconsin-Illinois state line, additional loading for one of the cables to Chicago was installed, and additional circuits were constructed between cities of the state. There was a net gain of 19,000 Bell telephones in the state during the year, with the result that the Wisconsin Telephone Company was providing service at the beginning of the new year to 340,200 telephones, and the 578 telephone companies or associations whose lines interconnect with the Bell System were providing service to 201,400 telephones, making a total of 540,600 interconnecting telephones in the state.

A father took his little boy, Billy, to the park, and there the youngster saw a stork among other interesting exhibits. The boy seemed to be greatly interested in the stork, and looked at him as long as he could. Then, turning to his father, he said disappointedly:

"Gee, Daddy, he never recognized me!"—Children.

"Pa," said the kid, "what is meant by being 'twixt the devil and the deep sea?"

"It is the position a man is in, son, when the traffic cop signals to stop and the back-seat driver orders him to go ahead," replied his dad.—Washington Star.

NO LONGER DEPEND ON MIDNIGHT SUN

Electric Lights Installed by Eskimo in Arctic.

Edmonton, Alta.—No longer will the midnight sun reign supreme in the far reaches of the Arctic circle, according to word reaching here from officers of the Canadian Royal Mounted police whose duty it is to patrol that territory.

The story told illustrates the advance of modernism. The icy igloo associated with the Eskimo has gone. The kayak is still used for traveling on the water for short distances but gasoline motors and sturdier boats are also used. The marriage customs remain practically the same, but the exchange of wives is rapidly passing into the limbo of forgotten things.

More than all this, however, is the forsaking of the old seal-oil lamp for electricity.

According to the Mounties, Pavoo Poliak, Eskimo, whose home is up near Akalvik, within the Arctic circle, came out as far as a mission post. There he saw a lighting plant similar to those used on farms, in operation. He inquired the price. With the proceeds of his trapping and fishing he found he had sufficient cash to purchase one and did.

Loading it on sleighs he started back to his shack home, miles away. All the way he thought of the superior position the possession of such magic would give him, and the way seemed short. Arriving at his home he installed the plant according to directions and issued invitations to a house warming.

Eskimos from miles around came and when they were assembled Pavoo turned a switch. Shouts of surprise resounded as the bulbs burst into light. The guests were astounded.

Pavoo showed them how the switches worked, and then, one after the other, the visitors turned lights off and on. This lasted for hours until Pavoo had fed them all and sent them home.

Hypnosis Shows Anxiety Plays Havoc With Body

Atlanta, Ga.—New evidence that anxiety can play havoc with the body no less than with the mind has been obtained by use of hypnosis. The tests were made by Dr. J. C. Whitehorn, Dr. Helge Lundholm and G. E. Gardner of McLean hospital, Waverley, Mass., and were reported before the American Psychiatric association here.

The experiments indicate that when an individual becomes extremely anxious and fearful his body engine may race like a motor under pressure and strain. On the other hand, moods of depression, elation, or irritability do not appear to produce any certain increase in the metabolic rate, that is, the rate at which the body engine converts food into tissues and energy.

Obtaining data on bodily processes during an emotional state is difficult because an excited individual is not likely to remain sufficiently quiet to permit the making of accurate tests with apparatus. A psychologist who consented to be hypnotized was used for the tests.

Rebels' Tractor-Tanks Are Returned to Farms

Mexico City.—Farm tractors in Mexico led as hectic a life during the recent military rebellion as some of the participants themselves.

Among the "spoils of war" captured by the federals after the rebel retreat in Chihuahua were several farm tractors which had been commandeered from private ranches, armored by rebel blacksmiths and turned into war tanks.

The Mexicans dubbed them "Cochinitas" (little pigs) when they waddled up to the firing line for the first time. Several which have been brought here are now being de-armored and will be put back to their former peaceful pursuits.

Madrid Women Are Not Old-Fashioned

Madrid.—The women of "old Madrid" are by no means old-fashioned these days. Twenty-year-old Senorita Pilar Croaga, pretty student at the school of engineers in the capital, recently drove the Madrid-Gijon express train over 350 miles of winding and dangerous road.

Wants Burglars to Pay Rent for Tools

Butte, Mont.—Tired of having his place robbed of chisels and hammers, Al McLeod, Butte blacksmith, posted a prominent sign, "Burglar Tools for Rent," in his shop, hoping that prospective burglars will be thoughtful enough to pay him a small fee for the use of his tools in the future.

McLeod's shop has been broken into numerous times. Hammers and cold chisels were the only articles taken. On one occasion the thieves returned the stolen articles the night after they gained access to his shop, but other prospective burglars were not so thoughtful.

The "Burglar Tools for Rent" sign will be illuminated at night.

Arizona Announces Plans for Western States Exposition

Arizona's plans for a comprehensive exhibit at the California Diamond Jubilee State Fair and Western Exposition, next September, are given in a communication received by Charles W. Paine, secretary, from the office of Governor John C. Phillips, says a Sacramento dispatch.

Governor Phillips, who became interested in the exposition through the efforts of Fred H. Bixby of Long Beach, a member of the state fair board, arranged for the exhibit with the co-operation of the Arizona State Fair Commission, the Arizona Industrial Congress, the Arizona Farm Bureau Federation and the University of Arizona Extension Service.

Inasmuch as Arizona's development is centering more and more on agriculture and irrigation, agricultural products and possibilities, will be featured in the display, with due attention to the long staple cotton, alfalfa, citrus fruits, lettuce, cantaloupes, dates, dairy products and other farm commodities for which the neighboring state is best known.

A decorative background will symbolize the character of the Arizona country, with its colorful mountains, forests, great dams and lakes, picturesque desert stretches and verdant irrigated valleys. The agricultural section also will point out that new reclamation projects recently completed in Arizona have added 250,000 acres to the state's irrigated areas while proposed projects cover 150,000 acres more.

An extensive mineral display will show the state's importance in mining, as Arizona produces nearly half the copper of the United States and one-fourth of the entire world's output. The cattle and sheep industries likewise will be illustrated. A forestry section will be of particular interest, for it is little known that Arizona contains the most extensive pine forest in this country and has a considerable lumber industry.

The Arizona exhibit will be one of ten to be installed in the Western States building at the Fair, giving a panoramic picture of western resources and production.

SUMMONS TO ESTABLISH TITLE

No. 15716.

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the County of San Mateo.

The Doxsee Company, a corporation, Plaintiff, vs. All persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described or any part thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California: To all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described or any part thereof, defendants, greeting:

You are hereby required to appear and answer the complaint of The Doxsee Company, a corporation, plaintiff, filed with the Clerk of the above-entitled Court and County, within three months after the first publication of this Summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property or any part thereof, situated in the County of San Mateo, State of California, particularly described as follows:

Lots 1 and 2 in Block 10; Lots 27, 29 and 30 in Block 1; Lot 17 in Block 9; Lots 41, 42, 43, 44, 45 and 46 in Block 10; Lots 1 and 48 in Block 18, as all of said lots and blocks are shown upon that certain map entitled "Map of $75.00 Lot Homestead," which said map was filed for record in the office of the County Recorder of the County of San Mateo, State of California, on the 3rd day of October, 1870, in Volume 1 of Maps at page 6.

And you are hereby notified that, unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to-wit: That it be adjudged that the plaintiff is the owner of said property in fee simple absolute; that its title to said property be established and quieted; that the Court ascertain and determine all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said property, and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, and whether the same consists of mortgages or liens of any description; that plaintiff recover its costs herein and have such other relief as may be meet in the premises.

WITNESS my hand and the Seal of said Court this 14th day of May, A. D. 1929.

(SEAL.)
ELIZABETH M. KNEESE, Clerk.
By Mura B. Stilleson, Deputy Clerk.
Franklin Swart, Attorney for Plaintiff.

MEMORANDUM.

The first publication of this Summons was made in the Daly City Record on the 17th day of May, 1929.

The following persons are said to claim an interest in, or lien upon, said property adverse to plaintiff:

William I. Wilson and Henry C. Hyde, as assignees of Pioneer Loan & Land Association, a bankrupt corporation. Address unknown.

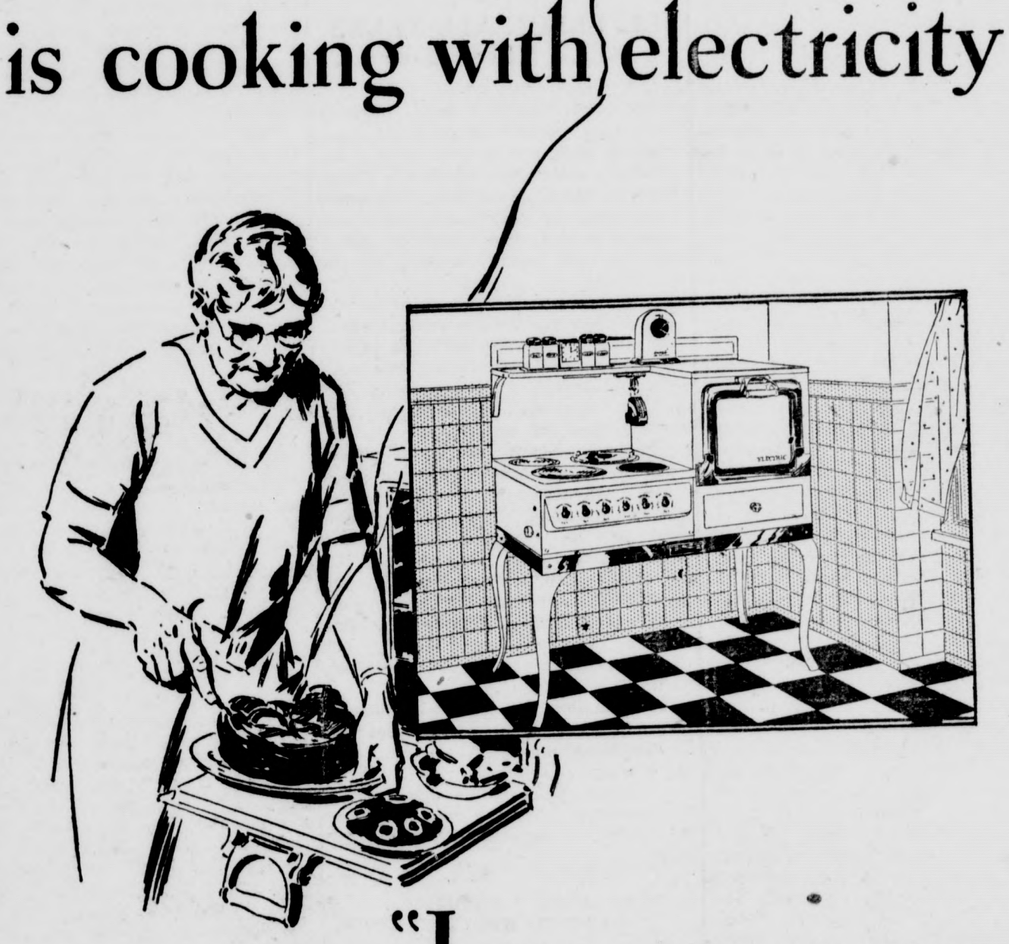
Grandma is cooking with electricity



"JUST keeping up with the times," says Grandma Collins, "I am one of the many new users of the electric range. I was just over at the P G and E's office and they told me one-thousand five-hundred of their customers will get electric ranges this May and June."

The electric range gives a beautiful, clean kitchen and perfect baking to women who love modern methods.

The electric range has white and gray porcelain enamel that makes kitchens attractive. It bakes perfectly. And it does it automatically. The oven heats up to 400 degrees in 9 to 11 minutes—as fast as one can mix biscuits. The open or closed cooking elements are now made smaller to fit your pans. Heat that was formerly wasted goes to work. Food cooks faster, less electricity is used.

While you're downtown, stop in at a dealer's or at our office and see these new electric ranges. Or telephone us and our representative will gladly show you pictures of the many beautiful new models.

Electric water heating is now economical

The cut in rates of a year ago, means that an electric water heater, when used with an electric range, heats water for only one-third to one-half of a cent per gallon. So little to pay for hot water. And a CLEAN, COOL, all-electric kitchen.

No wonder that women using electricity for cooking are turning to electricity for heating water.

VETERANS WILL DISCUSS CHILD WELFARE WORK

Eleven wester nstates will send representatives to the Child Welfare Confgerence which will be held in San Francisco, June 24-25, by officials of the American Legion and the American Legion Auxiliary for a general discussion of the problems facing the workers among the dependants of the World war veterans.

The representatives of the various states will be Dr. H. K. Brown, Washington; Judge Jacob J. Kanzler, Oregon; Miss Frances Vollmen, Montana; William O. Hall, Idaho; Dean Franklin C. Smith, Wyoming; Paul H. Hobby, Utah; Durbin Van Law, Colorado; Mrs. Dolores McMinimy, New Mexico; Dr. I. L. Garrison, Arizona; and Dr. H. G. Watters, California.

The invitation to hold the conference in San Francisco was extended to Paul H. Hobby, chairman of the wester narea of the American Legion's welfare division by State Commander F. N. Belgrano, Jr., of the California Department of the Legion, Mrs. Alyce J. Gill, Departmen President of the American Legion's Auxiliary, and Dr. Watters, Department Child Welfare chairman.

The dates of the conference are immediately preceding the annual convention of the National Conference of Social Work, which is to be held in San Francisco, June 26 to July 3. The director of the National Child Welfare Divison of the Legion, Miss Emma C. Puscner, will attend both conferences and wil lalso stop for the Legion child welfare conferences in Denver, Salt Lake City, Los Angeles, Portland and Seattle.

One of the attractive features will be a child welfare exhibit arranged by Miss Puschner and made possible through the use of child welfare material of the National Child Welfare Division of the Legion and the U. S. Children's Bureau.

Improved legislation and the application of existing legislation is being sought by the Legion for the benefit of orphaned and neglected children in evevry state. Although the Legion and the Auxiliary are particularly interested in the welfare of World war orphans and the children of World war veterans, the work that is being carried on is designed to be of equal benefit to all children in unfortunate circumstances.

RILEY ELECTED TO HEAD LIONS CLUB

Ray Le Grande Riley of Sacramento, controller of the state of California, was elecetd president of the International Association of Lions Clubs at the thirteenth annual convention at Louisville, Ky., on June 21. He takes office immediately, succeeding Ben A. Ruffin of Richmond, Va., as head of the second largest service organization in the world, with 1,840 clubs and 70,000 members, in every state in the Union, and every province of Canada, and in China, Mexico, Cuba and Hawaii.

Mr. Riley is descended from pioneers of Massachusetts and Pennsylvania. He was born at Vicksburg, Mich., was educated there, and at the age of 17 was a licentiate in pharmacy. He was a pahrmacist in Michigan, and later at Dillon, Mont., and Colton, Cal., until ten years ago.

For thirty years Mr. Riley has been in the public service. He was justice of the peace before he left Michigan; he served two terms as alderman of Dillon, Mont.; he was for two terms a city trustee of Colton, Cal.; he was twice elected county supervisor of San Bernardino county, California; state water commissioner 1917-1919; state real estate commisioner 1919-1921. He was appointed state controller in 1921, was elected to that office in 1923, and was re-elected in 1927.

MANY DIVORCES IN CALIFORNIA IN 1928

The Department of Commerce announces that, according to the returns received, there were 46,945 marriages performed in California during the year 1928, as compared with 53,487 in 1927, representing a decrease of 6,542, or 12.2 per cent. Attention is called to the law, effective July 29, 1927, making it compulsory to apply for a license at least three days in advance of the marriage ceremony. In 1926, 56,664 marriages were performed, and in 1916, 30,996.

During the year 1928 there were 14,458 divorces granted in the state, as compared with 14,135 in 1927, representing an increase of 323, or 2.3 per cent. In 1916, there were 5,573 divorces granted. There were 1,443 marriages annulled in 1928, as compared with 1,629 in 1927.

The estimated population of the state of California on July 1, 1928, was 4,556,000, and on July 1, 1927, 4,433,000. On the basis of these estimates, the number of marriages per 1,000 of the population was 10.3 in 1928, as against 12.1 in 1927; and the number of divorces per 1,000 of the population was 3.17 in 1928, as compared with 3.19 in 1927.

The number of marriages was furnished by the State Board of Health and the number of divorces by the County Clerk of each county. The figures for 1928 are preliminary and subject to correction.

EMBASSY THEATRE NOW SHOWING "NOAH'S ARK"

Much discussion has been aroused in the motion picture industry as to the flood scenes in Warner Bros.' "Noah's Ark," which is now showing at the Embassy Theatre, San Francisco. Darryl F. Zanuck, who supervised the production, admits it was one of the most colorful tasks ever faced in the making of any super feature. Both Zanuck and Jack L. Warner generously give credit for these sequences to Fred Jackman, who is responsible for the photographic effects. Warner Bros. provided Jackman with a crew of 125 men, who started working on the production two months ahead of Michael Curtiz, the director, and who were kept busy for more than three months after the taking of the final scenes.

"Noah's Ark" has an all-star cast headed by Dolores Costello, George O'Brien, Noah Beery and Louise Fazenda, and in many scenes as many as 10,000 extras are used.

MARION DAVIES THEATRE PRESENTS "THE GAMBLERS"

Maintaining the lead which they established as the pioneers of the talking picture, Warner Brothers have just completed in "The Gamblers" what is undoubtedly the most powerfully dramatic Vitaphone production ever filmed. In this picturization of the famous stage play by Charles Klein, now showing at the Marion Davies Theatre, San Francisco, the active head of a Wall Street financial company gambles not only with the money of his depositors, but with the love of his friend's wife, and it is through this circumstance that there arises situations of the utmost intensity. For the friend is a government prosecutor, out to "get" the law-breaking financial "crowd," and intent upon sending them to the penitentiary. The result is a remarkable story which is replete with drama, with much of its action taking place in the palatial home of a New York millionaire.

BANDED BIRD FLIES OVER SEA TO AFRICA

Route Followed Mystifying as Feat Itself.

Washington.—The finding of a dead bird on a beach in South Africa may unlock a secret which has long puzzled American naturalists.

The bird, an Arctic tern, carried a small metal band on one leg with the number 548,138 and, in abbreviated form, the address of the bureau of biological survey, United States Department of Agriculture.

O. L. Austin banded the tern at Turnevik bay, Labrador, on July 28, 1928. Four months later it was found in South Africa.

Scientists have recognized the Arctic tern as the Lindbergh of the bird world. It makes the longest migration of any bird, summering in the Arctic and wintering in the Antarctic. Eleven thousand miles to a winter resort is an all-time record.

What Route Is Mystery.

By what route does the Arctic tern fly from the North pole to the Antarctic? That has been the question.

H. J. S. Heather of Durban, Natal, has communicated to the National Geographic society the circumstances of the important find, which may answer the question:

"The tern was picked up by Mr. Wackrill of Johannesburg, a few miles south of Port Shepstone. His discovery, the biological survey wrote the finder, was the most remarkable case that has been reported in any country. It suggests that the Arctic tern leaves the northern reaches of North America, flies to Portugal, crosses the length of Africa and then 'hops' to the Antarctic continent."

The new evidence adds about 2,000 miles to the previous 11,000 miles estimated airline flight of the species. The Arctic tern enjoys more daylight than any other living creature because it lives in regions where the sun never sets and only experiences night on its semiannual journeys across the equator.

Terns and other shore birds travel more widely than any other feathered creatures. The golden plover raises a brood in Ungava or northern Labrador and in the fall wings out over the ocean, never stopping until it reaches Bermuda. On it flies, pausing perhaps at the Bahamas, or the Lesser Antilles on the way to South America. The first of the golden plovers have been reported arriving in Paraguay before the last have left the breeding grounds. They "winter" on the Argentine pampas where the summer sun makes food plentiful.

Even unadventurous appearing warblers travel far to escape the cold breath of winter. Of our American species and subspecies twenty-two winter in the West Indies, forty-four go to Mexico, thirty-seven push on to Central America, while twenty-two reach South America. It is a fact for never ceasing wonder that some warblers and other small birds fly 500 miles across the Caribbean sea without resting.

Probably the most remarkable nonstop oversea flights are those of the Pacific golden plover. Coming south from Alaska it touches at the Aleutians and then takes off for Hawaii. It crosses 2,800 miles of open ocean. How plovers are able to locate the Hawaiian islands in the middle of the Pacific is a mystery of nature.

Remarkable Flight Records.

Birds that nest in the southern hemisphere also have remarkable records for travel. The slender-billed shearwater makes a circuit of the Pacific ocean. It breeds in southern Australia, flies north along the Asia coast and returns south by the American coast.

Promotion of bird-banding has revealed many unknown and unsuspected facts of bird migrations and habits. Telltale bands have shown the male wren to be an extremely inconstant fellow who ought to be paying heavy worm alimony and have also supplied facts on which practical plans for the conservation of birds life can be made.

"At present nearly 1,200 banding stations are in operation in all parts of the country," writes E. W. Nelson, formerly head of the bureau of biological survey, in the National Geographic Magazine.

"The operators send the data regarding each individual bird banded to the bureau, which has established an indexed card file of such records. Widespread interest is expressed in reports of the capture of banded birds, of which 13,734, representing about two hundred species, have been retaken, either alive or dead."

Farmer Catches Muskrat, Then State Exacts Fine

Billings, Mont.—Just because he caught a muskrat by the tail and impounded him in a box with the idea of starting a muskrat farm, F. G. Kell was fined $25 for possessing a fur-bearing animal without having obtained the proper permit or license for its capture. The muskrat was running around in Kell's barn when the capture was made.

Sights Whale School

Eureka, Calif.—One of the largest school of whales seen off the coast near here in recent years was reported by Capt. Willard Cousins. Cousins said there appeared to be about fifty of the marine monsters in the school. The spouts thrown up by the whales, according to Cousins, resembled a field of geysers.

BANK PRESIDENT MOST OPTIMISTIC AS TO FUTURE

The amount of business that the trust department of a bank is able to obtain may be an important item in guaging its efficiency, but far more vital features are the heart and the soul and the human understanding that such a department may be able to put into its work, James A. Bacigalupi, president of the Bank of Italy, said in an address to the thirty-fifth annual convention of the California Bankers Association at Sacramento.

Bacigalupi, who has a nation-wide reputation as a forceful and eloquent public speaker, was given an ovation both at the beginning and at the conclusion of his address.

"While billions today express in figures the potentialities of trust business, the one outstanding attribute of the trust department which has always appealed to me as of even greater and more far-reaching importance is its constant opportunity for the exercise of helpful humanitarian effort," the speaker said. "It is the one department of the bank which not only demands a soul, but which permits the bank to demonstrate that it does in truth possess a heart, besides financial acumen, which it yearns to place at the disposal of all worthy patrons who may stand in need of sure, efficient and sympathetic confidential co-operation.

"These are days when the best thought of the nation is intent upon giving to business the refining touch of sincerity, truth and helpfulness; when consideration for the public welfare is recognized as an essential element in even purely commercial enterprise; when the spirit of service to mankind is glorified and exalted as it never has been glorified and exalted before.

"It is not strange, therefore, that even the prosaic business of commercial and savings banking should now assume a new attractiveness because of this alliance and intimate association with new ideals as exemplified in the activities of a trust department that has for one of its most important objects the care and conservation of the widow's mite, the orphan's meager legacy, the precious store of the aged, the infirm and the incompetent and the affairs of those who are no longer present to carry on."

The speaker made the striking statement that "to the honor and glory of our banks, no charge of negligence or loss has ever been successfully prosecuted against any bank engaged in the administration of a trust."

"Where," he asked, "has there ever been a type of public or private service of a record that is comparable to this?"

Epitomizing the various activities of trust service, the speaker said:

"In fine, in all its wide range of activities the underlying principle of trust work is conservation, protection, painstaking and efficient service, cordially, conscientiously and constantly supplied."

A gowing tribute was paid by the speaker to the place occupied by the corporate fiduciary, or trust department, in human society:

"Verily the corporate fiduciary when properly understood and appreciated will be hailed as the greatest servant of the people; as the most profoundly helpful service dedicated to the needs and wants of man. With this equipment for public service, particularly at this stage of our country's growth and resultant prosperity, with new millions of acquired and inherited often in weak and inexpedienced hands, the universal propaganda of 'will-making,' fostered and promulgated by the trust companies and banks of the nation during recent years is surely most opportune and timely."

Mr. Bacigalupi urged further and more intensive education among all classes of society along the lines of the necessity for will making and of trust service for the administration of estates. "When such education obtains generally," the speaker suggested, "the average man of wealth will no lnnger receive with reluctance the suggestion of a definite plan for the administration of his estate, but will rather regard the discussion of the vital problems of his will as a business problem to be solved with the co-operation of his attorney and his banker while he is still in the full and vigorous possession and in the free and prudent exercise of his mental faculties."

Further emphasizing the need for such education, he said:

"The struggle of our clients to accumulate wealth should not preclude all thought of a plan on their part to safeguard the fruits of a lifetime of honst labor.

"Widows and minor children and the aged should not be left without the guiding hand of an honest and experienced trustee, or permitted to wander aimlessly to inevitabl financial ruin.

"The proceeds of life insurance should not be squandered in one wild orgy of spending during the dangerous period of readjustment following the death of the master of the house.

"In thus endeavoring to make his customers 'will conscious,' the farseeing banker, through his trust department, is performing a distinctly meritorious service."

Mr. Bacigalupi stated that statistics recently released by the Treasury Department at Washington showed that approximately 400,000 estates, representing assets of over $5,000,000,000, are now probated annually and that approximately 60 per cent of the money involved belonged to estates administered in the five states of New York, Pennsylvania, Illinois, Massachusetts and California.

During the year 1928 over five billions of life insurance alone was lodged with American trust companies under agreements of trust, and yet life insurance divisions of trust company service are but in their infancy," he said. "During succeeding years the inflow of several billion dollars a year of trusteed life insurance policies to banks that have trust departments will be but the normal new business increase from this one source alone."

In conclusion the speaker expressed the opinion that the trust companies of California and the Pacific Coast were on the eve of a tremendous development and that those trust companies and trust officers who fully lived up to their responsibilities would reap the benefit of this development, not only in money, but "in the boundless confidencce and enduring appreciation and undying gratitude" of the present and all succeeding western generations.

IN HONOR OF EDISON

This being the fiftieth anniversary year of Thomas A. Edison's invention of the incandescent electric light, an elaborate celebration including numerous events covering a period of five months has been arranged, called Light's Golden Jubilee.

The opening event was held in connection with the dedication of the new Atlantic City municipal auditorium on Many 31, and the closing ceremonies will take place at Dearborn, Michigan, on October 21, the actual anniversary of Edison's epoch-making achievement, when President Hoover will address the world in an international radio hook-up that will be the greatest in history.

On this occasion Mr. Edison will throw a switch which will set in motion the great River Shannon generating station which will furnish power for the entire Irish Free State, and he will also re-enact the scene of his successful experiment in bringing the incandescent light into being.

It is gratifying that Edison has lived to see fifty years of development of this wonderful invention which his towering genius has given to mankind. In that period the light and power industry has grown from practically nothing to one of the greatest agencies for human comfort and progress, and yet the practical application of electricity to these ends is conceded to be still in its infancy.

LINDBERGH'S HONEYMOON

Sensible persons will rejoice that Lindbergh and his bride outwitted the nosey metropolitan reporters by getting away to enjoy their honeymoon unmolested by clicking cameras and impudent questioners.

Readers of daily newspapers, particularly those of New York City, may be thankful that they escaped the many pages of silly stuff that would have been published had the whereabouts of the couple been known.

It must have been a great disappointment to the editors of the sensational section of the press that they were unable to more fully exploit the fact that two estimable young people were married, or that reporters and cameramen could not hound them at every turn.

Even a popular hero is entitled to some privacy once in a while, and Lindbergh appears to have found it for the first time since his spectacular rise to world fame.

THE WORLD'S AUTOS

Interesting figures concerning the distribution of motor vehicles throughout the world are contained in the annual booklet just issued by the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce, which shows among other things that while China has only one automobile for every 17,000 persons, the United States has one for every 4.9 persons.

Outside of United States territory, Canada ranks highest in the number of cars in proportion to population, having one motor vehicle for every nine persons.

In respect of actual numbers the United States registrtion represents 77 per cent of all the automobiles in the world, or 24,493,124. The United Kingdom stands second with 1,318,-169, closely followed by France and Canada with slightly over a million each.

Among the states, California has more automobiles in proportion to population than any other, with one motor vehicle for every 2.8 persons. Georgia stands lowest, with one for every 11.5 persons.

Crossing a street is an exhilarating sport, but is is humilitating to be tackled by a flivver and thrown for a loss when only two yards from the curbstone goal.

Late reports say Mexico still has a living ex-president, but we don't guarantee this news.

Even a strong, silent man will loosen up a bit at $1 a word.

AN ABLE COMMISSION

Whether President Hoover's recently appointed Commission on Law Enforcement, headed by former Attorney General Wickersham, shall find a solution to the tremendous problem which confronts it or not, it is generally conceded that its membership is composed of ten men and one woman admirably suited to the difficult task.

None of the eleven can be classified as being either fanatically wet or fanatically dry, but a survey of their previous records and utterances inclines observers to place six in the dry column and five in the wet. This may or may not be an accurate estimate, but in any event it appears that the commission is fairly well balanced in this respect. What is even more important is the fact that each member is credited with the highest character and the purest motives.

The commission will study all phases of the crime problem, not merely the prohibition question. A long and arduous duty confronts these distinguished citizens, and while their conclusions will be advisory only, their finding will doubtless carry great weight and be of the highest value in framing legislation designed to ccorrect the deplorable conditions which now exist, particularly if they are able to agree unanimously, or nearly so, in their final recommendations.

In the meantime their fellow citizens should give them full moral support in their patriotic undertaking.

RED-BLOODED AMERICANS

Some persons claim that young people today are short in their moral standards. This is a mistake. They may be freer in their actions, but they are better informed on social pitfalls than were their brothers and sisters a generation ago. We read about slick-haired sheiks and flapping flappers, but we overlook the army of wholesome young Americans who are interested in manly and womanly sports.

Artificial civilization has not taken away from the majority of us our delight in the primitive things of life—camping, hunting, fishing, horseback riding, mountain climbing, etc. A large percentage of magazines and books are devoted to stories of action, adventure, frontier happenings and deeds of heroism.

It is easy to make a strong argument if you don't allow yourself to be hampered by facts.

Keep the piano. The strings will come handy in repairing your aerial.

HEADS AND HATS

One must have a good opinion of his head to treat it to a $500 hat, it would seem, but that is what thirty or more Americans are doing this year, according to the style committee of the Hat Institute in New York, which also declares that the well dresed man must have a minimum of three straw hats this summer.

The headgear prescribed includes a yacht sailor for busines wear; a Panama, leghorn, manila or any of the body straws for sport, country and resort wear, and a China split for evening. The aristocrat of this layout is, of course, the Panama.

But the Panama belies its name, as it does not come from Panama at all, but is made in South America, being woven by hand from the straws of the stemless screw pines that grow wild in Ecuador and Columbia. Expert weavers often spend a year in making one hat, and when it is perfect in every detail it sells in this country for $500, where a market is found for about thirty each year.

Extravagance of women in the matter of hats has been the subject of many jibes in the past, but it appears that they have nothing on the fastidious male in this respect. Possibly a nifty hat is a useful adjunct in enabling one to get by with a mediocre head.

PAINLESS TRANSPORTATION

Ever since the advent of the automobile there has been continual improvement in devices to eliminate the unpleasant vibrations which characterized the early "rough riders." Particular attention has been given of late to providing easy riding ambulances for the sick and injured.

The ultimate in "painless transportation" is claimed to have been achieved by a Seattle company, which has installed on its fleet of ambulances a new device known as the Fafnir ball-bearing spring shackles. These, it is said, not only insure the desired ease of riding but add to the life of the springs and the vehicle, while requiring no oiling or other attention on the part of the operator.

We would have appreciated something like that on some of the "small cars" of ancient vintage in which we took our daily dozen—in fact, several dozen—in the past.

Colma News Notes

A marriage license was issued in San Francisco last Tuesday to Leslie Balestra, of Colma, and Irene Modena, of Vienna street, San Francisco.

Mrs. Jim Bertucci, who is spending the summer with her family at their summer home at Los Gatos, was a visitor in Colma last Tuesday.

Members of the drill team of El Carmelo Parlor No. 181, Native Daughters of the Golden West, will meet Friday evening at 8 o'clock at the Daly City Auditorium.

Mrs. Attilio Conserva and daughter, Miss Elenne, and Miss Angie Rodgers left during the early part of the week for Winters, Yolo county, where they will spend their vacation visiting Mr. and Mrs. Rodgers.

Angelo Benedetti and Henry Fuchs returned, the first part of the week, from a delightful two weeks vacation spent spent motoring through northern California, Oregon and Washington, going as far north as Canada.

The Girls' Club of Colma will meet next Wednesday evening at the home of Mrs. Pauline Shinazy, where they will sew on the bedspread that is to be given to the Colma Community Center.

The Fat Boy barbecue cabin at Colma is now under the excellent management of S. C. Robbins. Mr. and Mrs. Held, who were the former managers, are now in San Francisco, where they will spend a few weeks before making a motor trip about California.

A benefit whist party will be given by the San Francisco Girls' Athletic Club at the Y. M. I. Hall, 50 Oak street, San Francisco, Monday evening, July 15. Admission will be 50 cents. Several local girls are interested in the club and assure all attending a very pleasant evening.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Mansazen, of San Francisco, motored with friends from Colma to Hayward via the new San Mateo bridge, last Thursday. A picnic luncheon was enjoyed.

Mrs. William Fuchs returned to her home the first of this week from Modesto, where she was the house guest of Dr. and Mrs. George Fuchs and daughters, Misses Elizabeth and Marian.

Several members of the Girls' Club of Colma attended a theatre party at the Alcazar last Friday evening, and enjoyed seeing "The Masqueraders." George Bates, the leading actor, deserves much credit for his splendid work in making the play a huge success. After the show, delicious refreshments were enjoyed by the club members.

Members of La Fiesta Club enjoyed last Saturday afternoon at a tea given in the Rose Bowl, Palace Hotel. The table was artistically decorated with gardenias, roses and sweet peas. Those attending were: Lorraine Wall, Roberta Heagney, Tessie O'Connor, Nora Healey, Louise Clemens, Audrey Diamond, Marge O'Connor, Lois Baker, Flora Biagini.

A group of friends from Colma attended a swimming party last Wednesday at the Women's City Club on Post street, San Francisco. After the swim the following enjoyed dinner at the club: Mrs. M. P. Brown, Mrs. Irene Moresco, Mrs. Lucile Lemon, Mrs. Pauline Shinazy, Misses Fabian Ver Linden, Elsie Wilke and Mary Zipser.

Through a special arrangement with the Hudson Motor Car Company, the National Auto Company of Colma held an entirely new type automobile show at their sales rooms last Thursday evening, June 20. Mr. S. E. Flickinger, motor car expert of the Hudson Motor Car Company was in attendance. In addition to an automobile display, the remarkable motion picture, "Dynamic Detroit," was presented.

Mr. and Mrs. Louis Boetto, formerly of Colma, who are now residing at Menlo Park, spent a very pleasant week end with Mr. and Mrs. Al Banditini. Mrs. Banditini is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Boetto, and while here they took their youngest daughter, Miss Victorine, to Menlo Park with them, where she will spend her vacation.

Miss Agnes Flyn, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. P. D. Flyn, of Redwood City, who has been a teacher at Jefferson Hall, on San Pedro avenue, is leaving, much to the regret of her scholars and their parents, to receive a higher position in Redwood City, at the Lincoln school, where she will teach the sixth grade and also have charge of all athletics.

The New Colma Theatre management has announced a splendid bill for the coming week. Next Sunday, June 23, Dud Nelson and four acts of vaudeville and stage band, in addition to the feature, News and Comedy, should pack the threatre. On Monday and Tuesday, the feature will be "Forgotten Faces." Monday and Tuesday nights are Silver Nites, so be sure to be there. "Manhattan Knights" will be presented Wednesday, and on Thursday and Friday that great picture "The Big Parade" will be presented. There will be a double feature bill on Saturday, June 29—"The Tragedy of Youth" and "Burning Winds."

Miss Bertha Jensen, of San Francisco, and Julius Schindler, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. Schindler, of Colma, were quietly married last Saturday morning at the City Hall in San Francisco. After the ceremony a wedding dinner was enjoyed at the bride's home on Twenty-third street, San Francisco. In the evening a reception was held for the young couple at the home of the groom's parents in Colma. Dancing was enjoyed by a large group of relatives and friends, after which dainty refreshments were served. Mr. and Mrs. Schindler left last Monday morning for a two weeks honeymoon at Yosemite, and upon their return will make their home in San Francisco.

SIDELIGHTS

By Marcy B. Darnall

In choosing material for a baseball team one would not ordinarily pick a youngster unless he possessed two good arms and two good legs. Yet Dick Norment, 19, with only one arm and one leg, pitched a no-hit game for Lumberton, N. C., recently, striking out 15 men.

E. H. Buck was haled before Judge Floyd S. Buck of Detroit, charged with driving while drunk. "One hundred bucks," said Judge Buck.

Two prominent figures in the sport world advanced in the legal profession recently. Bobby Jones, golfer, was admitted to the bar in Atlanta, and "Muddy" Ruel, backstop of the Washington Senators, was admitted to practice before the United States Supreme Court.

The charge of "conduct unbecoming an officer" can be stretched to cover almost anything as Policeman Jules Reinhart of New Orleans found out. On such a charge he was suspended for allowing the attractive proprietress of a soft drink stand to powder his nose.

Bishop Acheson of the Episcopal diocese of Connecticut does not share the view that dancing is sinful, as was held by the women of one of his parishes. He rebuked them by saying, "it's the best reducing exercise there is."

This is the cat's whiskers. A London firm was recently taken to task for a violation of the customs laws upon receiving a consignment of children's handkerchiefs described as cotton. The handkerchiefs and the embroidered kitten in the corner of each were cotton, but each kitten had four tiny silk whiskers, which caused the whole outfit to be classified as silk.

William Banks of Brooklyn will in future be charitable toward telephone girls who give him the wrong number. Called from sleep by a midnight ringing of his telephone he found that the call was intended for someone else. He also found his home was full of escaping gas and by quick work saved his family.

Charles Law, a young Ohio farmer, would make a poor navigator. After successfully holding up a bank cashier and getting away with $4,000, he got lost in a cornfield at the edge of town and emerged from it near the scene of his crime, when he was promptly captured and placed in jail.

Three Milwaukee veterans, representing respectively the Civil, Spanish-American and World wars, fought with knives to settle the question as to which war accomplished most for the country. All three are in the hospital at the Soldiers' Home and liquor is blamed for the outbreak of hostilities.

A press dispatch, which tells of a lad in British Columbia who fell 800 feet down the side of a mountain on the family homestead, brings to mind the old story of that section in which a settler declared that he had fallen off his rancch twice in one day.

A sequel to the late former Vice-President Marshall's famous remark about the country needing a five-cent cigar is being told. After making the statement so often quoted, Mr. Marshall was deluged with cheap cigars from numerous manufacturers, but instead of smoking them he gave them to Tom Neil, negro attache of his office, who smoked them all. And died.

A teacher of Oakland, Calif., recently declared that "if you will teach a boy to blow a horn he will not be so apt to blow a safe." That is a terse statement in behalf of the refining influence of music and is worth thinking about. If crime could be reduced thereby, we might even tolerate a wider employment of the saxophone.

An Oklahoma newspaper expresses just indignation over the brutality of a young wanton who deliberately ran down and killed a valuable dog on the street with his automobile. Yet, if he ever reaches the prison cell to which he seems to be headed, the sob-sisters will probably regale him with flowers and delicacies.

An exchange suggests that bootleggers can be put out of business if people stop patronizing them. Why hasn't someone thought of that before?

Thirty years ago Cuba was a hotbed of yellow fever, malaria and other diseases. During the last fiscal year it had the lowest death rate of any country in the world, only 12 per 1,000 of population. What a triumph for modern medical science and sanitation!

One of grandfather's favorite stories: An animal trainer quarreled with his wife and as she was getting the beter of him he fled for refuge in a cage of lions. The lady looked through the bars at him, shook her fist and exclaimed, "You big coward, I dare you to come out."

NOTICE OF TRUSTEE'S SALE

WHEREAS, Charles H. Duerner and Theresa Duerner, his wife, of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, did, on the 12th day of December, 1927, make, execute and deliver their certain deed of trust, dated the 12th day of December, 1927, to Title Insurance and Guaranty Company, a corporation, as trustee for the benefit of Horatio F. Wood and Georgia G. Wood as beneficiaries, which said deed of trust was recorded on the 13th day of December, 1927, in the office of the County Recorder of the County of San Mateo, State of California, in Volume 32 of Official Records, at page 387, and which said deed of trust was given to secure the faithful performance of all obligations contained in said deed of trust and to secure the payment of a certain promissory note of said grantors payable to said beneficiaries, in the principal sum of Six Hundred and Fifty ($650.00) Dollars, and for that purpose conveyed to the said trustee the following described real property, situate in the County of San Mateo, State of California, to-wit:

Lot Twenty-five (25) in Block Twenty-nine (29) in Vista Grande as shown on the map of the subdivision thereof filed in the office of the County Recorder of San Mateo County, November 5, 1906, in Book "C" of Original Maps at page 3 thereof and copied into Book 4 of Maps at page 41 thereof.

WHEREAS, said grantors have made default in the payment of said promissory note and in the payment of certain other indebtedness secured by said deed of trust, and have defaulted under the terms of said deed of trust and said promissory note; and

WHEREAS, the said Horatio F. Wood and Georgia G. Wood, as such beneficiaries, did heretofore and pursuant to statute in such case made and provided on the 16th day of February, 1929, record in the office of the County Recorder of the County of San Mateo, State of California, in Volume 400 of Official Records at page 147, their notice of default and breach of said grantors under the terms of said deed of trust and notice of their election to sell, or cause to be sold, the said real property, reference to which said notice and the record thereof is hereby made; and

WHEREAS, the said beneficiaries have requested and authorized the undersigned trustee to sell the property described in said deed of trust and hereinabove described for the purpose of satisfying the said indebtedness of said Charles H. Duerner and Theresa Duerner, his wife;

NOW, THEREFORE, pursuant to said notice and demand, and in accordance with the terms and under the authority of said deed of trust, the undersigned trustee hereby gives notice that default has been made in the payment of the principal and interest of said note and in the payment of the indebtedness secured by said deed of trust, and that three (3) months have elapsed since the said recording of said notice, and that on Wednesday, the 3rd day of July, 1929, at the hour of 10:30 o'clock A. M. of said day, at the main entrance to the office of the San Mateo County Title Company No. 312 Webster Street, Redwood City, State of California, said trustee will sell at public auction, to the highest bidder for cash, the hereinabove described property, or such portion thereof as it may in its discretion deem necessary to sell in order to accomplish the objects of the trust in said deed of trust provided.

All bids and payments shall be made in lawful money of the United States of America at the time of said sale.

The beneficiaries under said deed of trust or any other person may purchase at said sale.

Dated: June 4, 1929.

SPEAKING OF FARMERS

What can be accomplished through sound agricultural methods, even under the prevailing conditions, was strikingly illustrted at the recent Southern region cconference of home economics and vocational education, when awards for outstanding accomplishments were made to farmers and teachers of agriculture.

First prize for cotton growing in the South was awarded to John A. Arrant of Pageland, S. C., who grew 3,746 pounds of cotton on three acres of land at an average cost of only six cents per pound.

The lesson to be drawn from this example of intensive farming is that the average farmer is cultivating too many acres, and doing it in an unscientific and haphazard manner. Fewer acres, better preparation of the seed bed, better seed, better cultivation and better methods of harvesting, handling and marketing are what is needed to make farming profitable.

If, combined with such practices, each farmer would see to it that he raises more food for his family and more feed for his stock on his own farm, a long step would be taken toward placing agriculture on a better basis than that which it obtains at present.

MUD AND DUST MUST GO

Twenty-five years ago in this country a good road was the exception, rather than the rule. Now we have the greatest highway system in the world. The growth in use of the automobile was responsible for this development.

Money spent for improved roads is returned in social and industrial benefits. Highways are the foundation of community progress. Now a new phase of highway expansion is appearing, the building of secondary or feeder roads.

Roads are being extended into rural districts as never before since methods have been devised for using asphalts and road oils to give water proof hard surfaces at a minimum of expense.

Reputation depends much on one's cleverness in not getting caught.

SUMMONS TO ESTABLISH TITLE

Action No. 15385.

In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the County of San Mateo.

Enrico Biggio, Plaintiff, vs. All persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described or any part thereof, Defendants.

The People of the State of California:

To all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described or any part thereof, defendants, greeting:

You are hereby notified to appear and answer the complaint of Enrico Biggio, plaintiff, filed with the Clerk of the above-entitled Court and County, within three months after the first publication of this Summons, and to set forth what interest or lien, if any, you have in or upon that certain real property or any part thereof, situated in the County of San Mateo, State of California, particularly described as follows:

Lots numbered two (2), four (4) and six (6) and portions of Lots numbered one (1), three (3) and five (5) in Block numbered nine (9) as shown on that certain map entitled "Map of the Lands of the School House Homestead Association Situate in the 1st Township San Mateo County," filed in the office of the County Recorder of San Mateo County, July 10, 1872, in Book "C" of Original Maps at page 61 and copied into Book 1 of Maps at page 9, being more particularly described as follows:

COMMENCING at the point of intersection of the Southwesterly line of Railroad Avenue with the Southerly line of Washington Street as same appear on the map above referred to; running thence Westerly on and along said Southerly line of Washington Street 166 feet; thence at right angles Southerly 215 feet to the Northerly line of Lot 2, Block 9; thence Westerly on and along said Northerly line of Lot 2, 75 feet to the Easterly line of Dunks Street; thence Southerly on and along said Easterly line of Dunks Street 176 feet 3 inches to the Southerly line of Lot 1, Block 9; thence Easterly on and along said Southerly line of Lot 1, 95 feet 6 inches to the Northwesterly line of San Pedro Avenue; thence Northeasterly on and along said Northwesterly line of San Pedro Avenue 24.24 feet to the most Southerly corner of that certain parcel of land distributed to Louisa Maria Selecani by decree dated March 21, 1929, and recorded March 21, 1929, File No. 30743 B, San Mateo County Records; thence on and along the boundary lines of the land so distributed to Louisa Maria Selecani N. 46 degrees, 48 minutes, 30 seconds W. 49.35 feet; N. 43 degrees, 01 minutes, 30 seconds E. 50 feet, and S. 46 degrees, 01 minutes, 30 seconds E. 49.20 feet to the most Easterly corner thereof and the Northwesterly line of San Pedro Avenue; thence Northeasterly on and along said Northwesterly line of San Pedro Avenue 238 feet 6 inches, more or less, to the aforesaid Southwesterly line of Railroad Avenue; thence Northwesterly on and along said Southwesterly line of Railroad Avenue 178 feet 10 inches to the point of commencement.

And you are hereby notified that, unless you so appear and answer, the plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint, to-wit: That it be adjudged that the plaintiff is the owner of said property in fee simple absolute; that his title to said property be established and quieted; that the Court ascertain and determine all estates, rights, titles, interests and claims in and to said property, and every part thereof, whether the same be legal or equitable, present or future, vested or contingent, and whether the same consists of mortgages or liens of any description; that plaintiff recover his costs herein and have such other and further relief as may be meet in the premises.

WITNESS my hand and the seal of this Court.

Dated: March 29, 1929.

VOTE FUNDS FOR N. D. G. W. HOME

Native Daughters of the Golden West, in annual grand parlor session at Santa Cruz, contributed $10,000 as a loyalty pledge toward liquidating the debt of the new Native Daughters' home in San Francisco. Mrs. Susie Christ of San Francisco, grand treasurer, reported it is hoped to pay off the debt completly by next year.

Close to 500 grand officers and delegates gathered at the beach auditorium of Casa Del Rey to hear the annual report rendered by Grand President Dr. Louise C. Heilbron, of Sacramento. It was revealed that the order is in a healthy financial condition, having enjoyed an unexpected monetary gain.

Announcement of the completion of the redwood memorial grove fund was made. This $7,000 fund is to be matched by the state for the purchase of a redwood grove to commemorate the grand parlor.

Under the direction of the homeless children committee, an exhibit was held in the sun parlors at the beach. Sentiment for the functioning of the committee and its worthwhile work has been aroused and more extensive help promised by individual parlors.

COLORFUL PAGEANT AT SAN JUAN SUNDAY

The romance of California's early Mission days will be revived at historic San Juan Bautista, Sunday, June 23, at a picturesque celebration commemorating the founding of the old mission one hundred and thirty-two years ago. A pageant depicting the days of the early Spaniards and the actiities of the Mission fathers among the Indians has been written for the event by Grace T. Michell and this will be enacted by students of the University of Santa Clara. A musical program and parade reminiscent of the Mission era will precede the pageant and a Spanish barbecue will be held in the rear of the mission during the afternoon.

To motorists traveling El Camino Real, Mission San Juan Bautista is probably one of the best known of the mission chain, due to its convenient location just off the main highway where the motor route passes through San Juan. San Juan is ninety miles from San Francisco, and nineteen miles beyond Salinas.

ANTI-FOREST FIRE CAMPAIGN OPENS

A statewide group to cope with the problem of preventing and sppressing forest fires in California this summer has been appointed. The committee was named at a meeting in the Palace Hotel, San Francisco, of federal, state and county officials and representatives of the California State Automobile Association and the Automobile Association of Southrn California.

Education of the general public will be one of the aims of the new committee, and a definite program of continuous activity will be formulated at another meeting to be held in Los Angeles on July 2.

MUSCLE SHOALS AGAIN

When one is moved to write about Muscle Shoals, he can imagine his readers saying, "Why bring that up?" But it is still an issue, and because of the long controversy which has been waged over the disposition of the government's $160,000,000 investment on the Tennessee river it is of public interest.

Following the Suprem Court's decision upholding the Coolidge pocket veto of the Norris government operation measure, Senator Norris reintroduced his bill and obtained a favorable report from the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry a few days ago.

There is no likelihood that President Hoover would approve a government operation measure, even though it should again pass both houses of Congress. So it appears that Norris is merely continuing his obstructive tactics in the determination to prevent a lease to the American Cyanamid Company or any other private corporation.

Being apparently strongly intrenched in the Senate, he may be able to maintain the deadlock which has existed for seven years. In fact, it seems doubtful that any disposition of Muscle Shoals will be made so long as Norris remains in the Senate. There seems to be no probability that he can ever get his own measure enacted into law, while on the other hand he can defeat any other Muscle Shoals proposal.

In the meantime, the great plant remains idle, although an offer of approximately $2,000,000 a year was recently made by a private corporation for the power alone.

PUBLIC BENEFITS FROM NEW ROAD

Public benefits that will flow from connecting the railroads of the Great Northern and the Western Pacific are set forth in an informative pamphlet which has just been issued by these two railroads for the use of the shipping and traveling public, officials of civic and commercial organizations, and others interested in the applications now pending before the Interstate Commerce Commission for authorization to construct the connecting lines of railroad.

An enlightening feature of the pamphlet is an up to date map in colors, which indicates the important railroad systems west of Chicago as well as the 200-mile connection which the Great Northern and the Western Pacific propose to build between Klamath Falls, Oregon, and the main line of the Western Pacific in California. Connecting lines are also indicated and the map illustrates how new competitive trade routes between leading cities and various sections of the west, including the Canadian provinces, will be created and established by making the connection.

The map also shows the situation of the intermediate territory which the Great Northern-Western Pacific connecting railroad will serve, this territory being "very rich in timber" with "substantial areas of good agricultural land as well as immense areas suitable for the production of livestock." The map shows that the new railroad will bisect this territory and that it will be from 80 to 100 miles distant in an air line, throughout the greater part of its length, from existing lines which traverse the outer edges of the great zone immediately affected.

The new transoprtation development involves, however, a question of public interest far broader and greater than the character of the territory through which the railroad would run, declare the Great Northern and Western Pacific in the pamphlet.

FORMER CITY CLERK GRANTED PROBATION

Miss Nettie A. Willits, former city clerk of San Bruno, who recently pleaded guilty of embezzlement and misappropriation of city funds, was given probation for two years when she appeared before Judge George H. Buck in the superior court in Redwood City for sentence.

Miss Willits will be given a chance to make good the $1500 still due the city during the two-year period.

Probation Officer Francis T. Rapp, in his report, stated that it would work a great hardship on Miss Willits to have to pay the sum unless it were spread over a period of time. She wanted it understood, the report read, that she pleaded guilty of a shortage in her accounts only, and that at no time did she feel that she was knowingly taking money.

FIRST WOODLAND CONCERT SUNDAY

At three o'clock next Sunday afternoon Bernardino Molinari, foremost exponent of symphonic music in Italy and conductor of the Augusteo orchestra in Rome, will lift his baton to direct the personnel of the San Francisco Symphony Orchestra, thus inaugurating the fourth season of open-air concerts presented in the Woodland Theatre at Hillsborough by the Philharmonic Society of San Mateo county.

Throughout the week the orchestra has been rehearsing under Molinari's tutelage, and a program of rare beauty is assured those who take advantage of the concert to be given in the charming outdoor setting of the Peninsula theatre.

The bodies of a man and woman, believed to have been killed Sunday night, when the machine in which they were riding plunged over a cliff, were brought to Livermore for an inquest. They were identified as Mrs. Barbara MacMichael, a cosmetician, of San Francisco, and Raymond Boyd, a painting contractor.

Among the safety devices for airplanes is a contrivance built into the seat of the plane. Should serious trouble arise, the pilot releases a lever and the passenger is dropped through the floor, the chute opening automatically. The passenger does not have to jump and is expelled into space without having a chance to get panic-striken.

A mechanical device, known as the "business brain," has been invented which will simultaneously do the work of a cash register, bookkeeper and adding machine and, from another part of the building, make a complete record of a sale at the time it is made.

Operated by foot, a folding automobile introduced in England develops a speed of 20 to 30 miles an hour, and when collapsed is small enough to be taken through a door.

Probably "Who's Who" of the future will include only the names of those who are famous enough to get pay for their testimonials.

Truthful Adam

Many, many men have pulled this old gag, but Adam was the only one to speak the truth when he said: "You are the only woman in the world for me."

When you think of Building, think of H. H.

Man (in search of his wife): "Bridget, do you know anything about my wife's whereabouts?"

Bridget: "Yes, sor, I put them in the wash."

"I'm thinking about buying a home," said a young man yesterday in our office. You know without another word that that young man is on the road to prosperity.

DURING THE WEEK

Chas. Duerner, one of our local builders, has started a pretty house on Hillcrest Drive, near Mission Circle.

Even As You and I

A fool there was and he saved his rocks, even as you and I; but he took them out of the old strong box when a salesman called with some wild cat stock, and the fool was stripped down to his socks, even as you and I.

Now is the time to buy your winter coal.

"I'm going to marry a girl who can take a joke."

"Don't worry; that's the only kind you'll get."

"That train smokes a lot, doesn't it?"

"Yes, and choos, too."

The minister approached MacGregor after church services and whispered: "You put a lead coin in the collection for foreign missions, MacGregor."

"Oh, that's all right—let it go," replied Mac. "The heathen won't know the difference."

Two-Year-Old Baby Is Witness in Court

Butte, Mont.—The youngest witness ever used in a local police court was a two-year-old boy, Robert Clifford, who exhibited a long cut on his face as evidence that a defendant in a disturbance case broke the glass in the front door of Mrs. Clifford's home. The youngster incurred the cut from flying glass.

SHIP'S CREW KEPT ALIVE BY PRAYERS

Adrift Eight Days in Wave-Buffeted Lifeboat.

New York.—Prayer and Bible readings sustained ten shipwrecked sailors through eight days of torture in a wave-buffeted lifeboat, it was revealed when the yacht Amida reached port with survivors of the four-masted schooner, James E. Coburn.

Eleven men abandoned the Coburn when it foundered on a voyage from Baltimore to Martinique. They were without food or water after the first four days. Three of them were white men, the rest negroes. While smashing seas broke against the sides of their twenty-foot yawl each man prayed to his own conception of a deity.

One of the white men, W. E. Milliken, engineer, became temporarily insane and his hysterical mutterings added to the babel of prayers. One of the negroes, W. Sargent, sixty-year-old cook, died. His body was not thrown overboard because the other ten men in the boat were too weary for the exertion involved.

Capt. Jose J. Pereira, of the Coburn, was the only survivor who could give a coherent account of the terror-laden days before smoke from the yacht Amida curled over the horizon and the men in the lifeboats knew rescue was at hand.

Captain McLaughlin, of the Amida, said he was fifteen miles off course when he sighted the yawl. The survivors were not told that the rescue was made possible only by accident.

Canned meat and hardtack were put into the yawl when the schooner was abandoned. Salt water soaked the crackers, however, and despite scanty rations the meat soon was gone. Four days before they were saved there was no food or water aboard.

Girl Bandit at Last Meets Woman Waterloo

New York.—A girl bandit—of course she was bobbed haired and blonde—led a holdup in the best bobbed haired bandit tradition and followed precedent so closely that after her arrest she talked too much and two men she named to the police were arrested.

John Raszwolsky, owner of a grocery store, was the intended victim. He was behind the counter when a young woman and two men entered. The woman, Raszwolsky told the police, pointed a revolver at him and demanded that he put up his hands and also give them all the money he had.

Mrs. Raszwolsky was in their apartment behind the store and heard what the woman said to her husband, so she screamed as loudly as she could. The scream unnerved the men with the girl, who were holding ropes in their hands ready to tie up the grocer as soon as they had his money. The men turned and made for the door and the girl dropped her pistol and followed.

Raszwolsky seized her, but she broke away. Too late, however, for Patrolman Hoffman had heard the scream and met the girl at the door with open arms. She gave her name as Emily Beloski, eighteen, and said she was an honest laundress out of work. Upon further information she gave them, detectives arrested William Moore, thirty-one, and Nicholas Turetsky. Moore said he was an Indian who formerly lived on a Colorado reservation.

Fears Alienation of Mate; Enjoins Couple

Waterbury, Conn.—The affection of Mrs. Arthur S. Hart of Watertown for her husband has been safeguarded by the law. Common Pleas Judge Harry J. Beardsley issued an injunction at Hart's request, restraining John J. Fairchild and Hilda Fairchild, his wife, from doing anything to alienate Mr. Hart's affections. It is believed to be the first court order of its kind ever issued in such a case.

100 Persons Killed by Fire in Poland

London.—One hundred persons were killed in a fire which destroyed 250 houses at Iwie, eastern Poland, during the night, an Exchange Telegraph dispatch from Warsaw said. Five hundred families were made homeless by the fire, whose flames could be seen 30 miles. Authorities suspect incendiarism.

Must Quit Novels

New York.—After leading four boys on a night raid on a public school in New York city, Charles Engel was sentenced to stop reading dime novels for one year.

Engel and his gang took stamps, pens, and pencils before they were caught by a night watchman.

How Schemers Fleeced Public

Oil Tricks, Stopped by New Policy, Described by Interior Department.

Washington.—"What," asks the Department of Interior in a recent press memorandum, "is behind the 34,000 permits, involving millions of acres of land, issued to individuals and companies to prospect for oil and gas on the public domain since the general leasing law was passed by congress nine years ago? Why have these permits ripened into only fifty-six leases? Why have 15,000 permittees, whose rights have already been canceled for noncompliance with the law, allowed their claims to lapse? And how will the new federal oil conservation policy curb the speculation in the potential oil lands of the country?

"These," the bulletin continues, "are some of the questions that have caused the Department of the Interior to issue a statement describing the speculation in the public domain and the methods by which promoters have been able to turn the lure of oil to their own profit and to the disadvantage of the public in exploiting the national resources.

"Many letters are on file at the department which reveal the methods by which individuals have been imposed upon in the matter of these oil lands.

"'I subscribed for twenty-five acres of oil land,' wrote an enlisted man in the army, 'to be filed on at $2 per acre. I have already paid $10 and will pay $10 more this pay day. The land is supposed to be United States government land.'

"Another correspondent who had begun to become suspicious of an oil development scheme wrote:

"'What steps would I take to get my money back? My wife and I have paid in $120 and we cannot lose it. As the association claimed the government had granted it the permit to develop, I cannot see why the government is not liable to be obliged to refund the money. As it has been some time since the filing, possibly the association has begun operations, and if so all is well. However, I can get no communication from them.'

Explains Permit.

"An oil and gas application is the holder's claim to the right to prospect on 2,560 acres of public land. This is filed in the local land office with a description of the land. A permit is his right to prospect which grows out of the application. The law requires that drilling be done progressively within time limits. Upon discovery of oil, the permittee is entitled to a lease, paying the government a royalty on all oil produced.

"It is admitted that many permits have been acquired by legitimate developers and the government has received millions of dollars in royalty from their efforts. No censure is attached to them. But upon the passage of the general leasing act, thousands of applications for prospecting permits were filed for land in so-called 'wildcat' territory, which, by the way, is land that has no visible evidence of containing oil and gas.

"These applications were filed in many instances without geological examination and by individuals without financial means of complying with the drilling requirements of the law. They had no special reason to believe that oil was present. Actual development, obviously, was not their purpose. Apparently, the hope was to obtain permits and hold them until some one had tested land for oil and gas in the vicinity, which would enable them to sell out at a large profit or secure a royalty on any oil that might be produced on their own area by others.

"When these permits were canceled for lack of development work, the lands would be filed upon again. Upon the failure of the second permittee to do the necessary prospecting work to hold the land, a third crop of applications might be filed, thus holding the land indefinitely without development.

"In the early days, when permits were canceled, the land became subject to another filing by the first qualified applicant at the district land office. The practice was criticized because certain people might obtain advance information as to when the permit was to be canceled and thus have an advantage over others. Later, the General Land Office allowed all interested parties to file on a canceled area, awarding the land to the individual whose number was first drawn.

"To take advantage of this situation interested persons or companies obtained the applications of hundreds of people whom they could control. It was like buying a multitude of chances in a lottery. The greater the number of controlled applicants at the time of drawing the better would be the chances of an individual or company getting the land. In one drawing there were 7,000 applications filed for a single tract of land—another evidence of pure speculation on behalf of the applicants. To circumvent this a $10 filing fee was required of each applicant at drawings in recent years, which materially reduced the number.

Efforts to Safeguard the Public.

"That the general leasing law has been used by many unscrupulous persons and associations for their own special benefit and to the detriment of those induced to enter into their schemes has long been apparent to the Department of the Interior, and every means possible has been taken to safeguard the public. Some of the schemes violate the general laws against fraud rather than the public land laws. They may involve an improper use of the mails and so need to be prosecuted by the Post Office Department. They are carefully watched by the authorities who enforce the various state and federal laws with which they come into conflict.

"A correspondent who is a mining engineer and geologist wrote the department as follows:

"'I found that every available acre of public land which was within ten miles had been tied up with permits overlapping one another so that in places they were two or three deep and over lands that had been taken as grazing homesteads or the mineral rights withheld. The parties who had obtained the permits were boomers, men without any knowledge or experience in oil structures or lands, without any money or backing or standing to obtain any and whose sole object was to get one to try it out for a little cash and agreement to get a share of the royalties. They would hold the permits as long as they could and then come back for renewal without even so much as digging a five-foot hole on them.

"In one instance an attorney prepared applications in blank or had them signed by people scattered through several states and forwarded to him. He held them until such time as he could discover from the district land office records lands which were subject to filing and then inserted the description of the land in the application. If the application had been executed some time in advance the date would be changed so as to conform more nearly to the time of the filing of the application. Usually these applications were accompanied by a power of attorney given to him by the applicant. In each instance the attorney would retain for himself a certain royalty interest and the holder of the application would have little to say as to the operations under the application or permit. Thus one man might control thousands of acres embraced in the applications and permits. The purpose of the law, that of giving individual citizens a chance to acquire valuable land, was thus interfered with.

"Interest" in Associations.

"Another group of persons advertised extensively that government oil land might be had at a nominal cost, that every citizen had a right to claim his share, that the promoters would show the way to great profits through these rights. They cited outstanding successes of others on government land. They proposed to organize associations, which they induced hundreds of people throughout the United States to join. Interest in these associations were sold for $2 an acre, not more than 160 acres going to any one person. They advertised that the interest holders would have nothing to do except to draw the royalties when oil was discovered, the backers of the association attending to all the details looking toward compliance with the terms of the permit.

"The filing of an oil and gas application for permit for 2,560 acres cost $32 in fees. The association under this scheme would thus make a profit of $5,088 on each application filed. The evidence is that these associations have done little more than file the applications. Their purpose, evidently, has not been oil development. The investors in their associations have taken long chances of getting any return on their investments, even where the associations have carried on development work, for all such applications have been filed on lands within strictly wildcat territory.

"The exploitation of the public through these permits to prospect will be automatically stopped by the application of President Hoover's oil conservation policy. Under that policy permits to prospect are not to be granted. Since they are not to be granted promoters will not be able to profit because of any alleged prospects of wealth that might lie in them. One element of speculation that is likely to be a part of the development of oil and mining areas will have been removed."

Small Boat for Trip Across Atlantic Ocean

Joe Leppich of Bronson, Mich. (left), aboard his homemade steel boat in which he will attempt to cross the Atlantic ocean. He will sail from Toledo through Lakes Erie and Ontario, the St. Lawrence river to St. Johns, Newfoundland, and then over to Hamburg, Germany. The ship is 26 feet long and has already withstood a fierce storm on Lake Michigan. Leppich will have four companions—Conrad Kubatko, Rudy Bentler and Henry Schnittger of Germany, and Arlo Sowers of Bronson.

AMERICANS EAT 35 LBS. MORE SUGAR EACH THAN IN 1910

Sweets Can Add Energy If Wisely Used, But Excess Is Dangerous, Says Expert.

New York.—Americans today are consuming more than 115 pounds of sugar per capita each year, or 35 pounds a year more than in 1910. What is that added 35 pounds doing to American health?

The rise of pro-sugar and anti-sugar diet faddists over the country has led Dr. Walter H. Eddy, widely known dietary expert of Columbia university, to offer a comprehensive answer to that question in the Good Housekeeping Magazine.

"Harmful effects of sugar are traceable to excesses in its use, rather than any harm in the sugar itself, which is an essential food," he points out, adding that the excess may be represented as often by the way sugar is used as by the amount consumed. The average healthy adult can consume three to four ounces a day without difficulty or ill effects, it is estimated.

The amount consumed by any individual depends largely, however, on the individual's degree of physical activity, Doctor Eddy points out.

For example, since sugar is a fuel, a boy who spends several hours a day in strenuous outdoor games can consume more than the average amount and find it advantageous, since it adds to his energy. His sister who spends the afternoon curled up with a book will quickly grow fat and slow of mind and body if she tried to eat the same amount of sugar in candy form. The same comparison applies to the office worker, who spends his days at his desk, and the laborer whose body is being exercised through the day.

Candy itself may supply needed energy at times. With athletes, if eaten soon before a contest, it adds fuel to supply bodily power, it is found. But if eaten before meals the result is discomforting because the chemical action of the sugar has retarded the flow of gastric juices.

"Suppose we dump a lot of sugar into the stomach just before dinner," says the Good Housekeeping article. "In the first place it tends to destroy our appetite for less strongly flavored food. If we sit down to dinner and consume our beefsteak, the steak finds no gastric juice to digest it. It has to remain there until the sugar is digested and the acid begins to flow, or it is sent on only partly digested. You see then the wisdom in placing desserts at the end of the meal."

Doctor Eddy disputes the claim that candy causes tooth decay. "Sugar is a good germ food, but it is hard to see how much of it could remain in the crevices of the teeth, since it is readily soluble in saliva and hence would be steadily diluted," he points out.

Swallow, my sister, O, sister, swallow,
How can thine heart be full of spring?
A thousand summers are over and dead.
What hast thou found in the spring to follow?
What hast thou found, in thine heart to sing?
What wilt thou do when the summer is shed?

—Swinburne.

THIS AND THAT

When making chocolate add a drop or two of cinnamon extract, instead of vanilla to the pot before serving.

Before baking potatoes, drop them into boiling water for a few minutes then put them to bake in a very hot oven. This saves time and heat.

Use milk instead of water when mixing mustard for the table.

Put macaroni to cook in a colander or coarse sieve, this will save it from sticking to the bottom of the pan and it can then be drained easily.

When making tomato soup the milk will not curdle if you pour it into the hot tomato, instead of the tomato into the milk.

When sleepless try a glass of hot milk just before retiring.

In preparing gravies, porridge and sauces add the salt just before serving.

When cream is thin add an egg white to each pint of the cream and whip.

Place apples in the cake box to keep the cake moist. Renew them as they wither.

Breakfast muffins may be toasted to serve with tea. Pull them apart and toast brown.

Spread the cut side of cheese with butter to keep it from drying out.

Grated cheese that has become dry may be made palatable by adding hot cream to it. When melted turn into a jar and use as cream cheese.

A small bit of leftover ham or meat, put through the meat grinder and added to mayonnaise will make nice sandwich filling.

Add a handful of raisins to rhubarb and apple pie; it improves the flavor.

Lemons and other citrus fruits keep better if hung in a wire basket.

Salt removes stains from silver if made by eggs. Remove fresh meat from paper at once.

A fresh nutmeg will, when pricked, show a bit of oil around the puncture.

Add a little lemon juice to the water when cooking rice; it keeps the grains separated.

Cream just turning sour may be sweetened and flavored and used as well as sweet cream.

Wooden spoons are the best for stirring dishes over the heat, as they never get hot and do not chip the enamel when such dishes are used.

Lemon juice added to frosting while beating improves it.

Modern Jelly Making.

The old fashioned methods of making jelly have been laid aside for the more quickly made, of modern science. When fruits which lacked pectin were used for jelly making the fruits with plenty were combined with them. Now we have the commercial pectin in bottles which greatly expedites jelly making. It needs less cooking and hence the juice makes more jelly. Now we may have plenty of the good blackberry jelly, which so many enjoy.

Blackberry Jelly.—Use four cupfuls of blackberry juice, made by crushing and draining the fruit. Drip through a cheese cloth then through a flannel bag if wanted sparkling and clear. To the four cupfuls of juice add eight cupfuls of sugar and one bottle of the liquid pectin. Bring to a boil then add the pectin at once, stirring well to thoroughly mix; bring to a rolling boil, and boil one-half a minute. Remove, let stand one minute, skim, pour into glasses and cover at once with hot paraffin.

Ripe Pineapple Jelly.—Put the ripe fruit through the meat grinder, after peeling, adding a little water. Cook five minutes then drain as above. To three cupfuls of juice add six of sugar and one bottle of pectin. Follow the directions as above.

Raspberry Jam.—This process does away with all the long cooking and drying up of the seeds. Crush the berries, using two quarts at a time. Measure the fruit into a kettle, add to the four cupfuls, six cupfuls of sugar and one-half cupful of liquid pectin. Cook and boil for two minutes before adding the pectin, remove from the fire, add the pectin and stir constantly for five minutes. Do not return to the heat. Let stand and skim, then seal while hot.

Blackberry jam is prepared in the same way, using one more cupful of sugar (seven cupfuls.)

Any crushed fruit may be prepared into jelly, jam and conserves with little cooking, thus saving the flavor as well as hours of time in preparation. On all bottles of the commercial pectin, directions are very clear, so that any one may have success with it.

Jelly and jam are always in order at any picnic, also a confection of some sort.

A Few Little Smiles

A WRONG DIAGNOSIS

Doctor—What you need to do, sir, is to relax. You are overworking yourself. Too much work and worry will send any man to his grave years before his time. Remember that. Your brain is overworked. Now, just what is your occupation?

Patient—I am a member of congress.

Doctor—Let me examine your pulse again; I must have made a mistake.

A Drawing Card

"Mrs. Silver, I understand you are a movie actress and that you have been happily married for ten years."

"Yes."

"To one husband?"

"Yes."

"Wonderful. I want to make you an offer to appear in vaudeville."

WALKING CANE

"Where is my cane? Wherever I stand it, when I look for it, it's gone."

"Well, it's a walking cane, isn't it?"

His Seat of Trouble

My brother surely loved bees,
He always was their friend,
He used to sit upon their hives,
But they stung him in the end.

The Richest Gain

"I'm not in business for my health," the hard-faced man snapped out.

"Indeed," said his pleasant-featured competitor. "You couldn't be in it for anything better worth having. If you don't get health out of it, your other rewards are of mighty little value."

Running True to Form

Debs—He's got a wonderful collection of old curios. It's worth while to see them.

Gebs—Yes, I know it is. I met his wife at the dance the other night and I think she must be about the oldest curio he has.

NEVER REGAINED IT

Doctor—That man once lost his health, but I've guarded it now for twenty years.

Ex-Patient—And that's the reason why he's never regained it, I suppose.

You All Know Him

He tried to cross the railroad track
Before the rushing train;
They put the pieces in a sack
But couldn't find the brain.

Congratulations

"By the way," the stuck-up girl remarked, "Jack and Harry proposed to me last night and—"

"You refused them both."

"Ye-es—but how did you know?"

"Easy! I saw them afterwards shaking hands."

Fifty-Fifty

The Offender—Dreadful sorry I ran you down.

The Victim—It's all right. I'm just as much ashamed of being run down by a prewar flivver as you are to be driving one.

The Provident Show Girl

The Soubrette—Goin' to wed that guy or leave him go an' then sue him for breach of promise?

The Show Girl—I think I'll marry him. If I get a lotta money all at once I'd likely blow it.

Necessary as the Seeds

Blinks—Wait a minute, I'm going to start my garden tonight and I have to stop in the drug store.

Jinks—Huh! You can't buy seeds in there, can you?

Blinks—It's a porous plaster for my back, not seeds, I buy there.

Worse Than Spooks

Bess—Are strange noises still heard in that haunted house?

June—Oh, it's worse than ever now, a family with a phonograph, player piano and parrot have just rented it!

Building permits at Pittsburg scored another record month for May when they totaled $128,800, according to figures issued by Frank Mellor, city building inspector. This is the largest total for the same period any other year. In May of 1928, building permits only totaled $19,000.

Building permits in Visalia continue to climb beyond the record of last year, being at present three times greater than for the same period a year ago. To June 1, permits aggregating $203,798 had been issued as compared with $74,425 last year.

Plans for a preliminary survey of the proposed shoreline highway into northern California are progressing rapidly, according to J. B. Piatt of Santa Rosa, chief engineer of the project.

Continental Can's new plant at Los Angeles has started operations and when operating at capacity will be capable of producing 25,000,000 cans a month. Between 500 and 600 men will be employed. Ground has been broken for another plant at Oakland.

The tanks at the Mormon Creek Fish Hatchery, near Sonora, are being cleared of the small trout in preparation for fish eggs which will arrive shortly. This shipment will include 250,000 Rainbow eggs from the East.

Citizens of San Jose are considering the prospects for passage of $200,000 school bonds which are due to be voted upon next October. Voters recently defeated $350,000 bonds for a municipal airport and $150,000 for paying property damage incident to rerouting the Southern Pacific tracks in that city.

More than 2000 creditors of the defunct Farmers and Merchants' Bank of Merced will be paid $100,000, according to Henry P. Hilliard, receiver. The payment of an additional 10 per cent brings the total payment to creditors to 45 per cent.

E. W. Weeks of Visalia wants to find out who is the best roper in California, according to word received at the office of the California Rodeo at Salinas. He is so anxious to know, he said, that he will give a beautiful saddle to the winner of the roping events of the rodeo, which will be staged at Salinas July 17-31.

Possibility that a federal farm for narcotic addicts may be located in Fresno county was disclosed by Senator Sanborn Young of Los Gatos. The site for one of two federal farms, one of which will be located on the Atlantic and the other on the Pacific Coast, will be chosen this month, Senator Young said. The government will spend between $5,000,000 and $7,500,000 for buildings and equipment on the farms.

Convinced that motorists will not slow down for mere railroad trains, the state is preparing to speed up grade crossing elimination. Signing legislation permitting negotiation and construction of more than one overhead structure or subway as a single project, Governor Young cleared the way for a program of more than thirty eliminations which the Department of Public Works plans for this year.

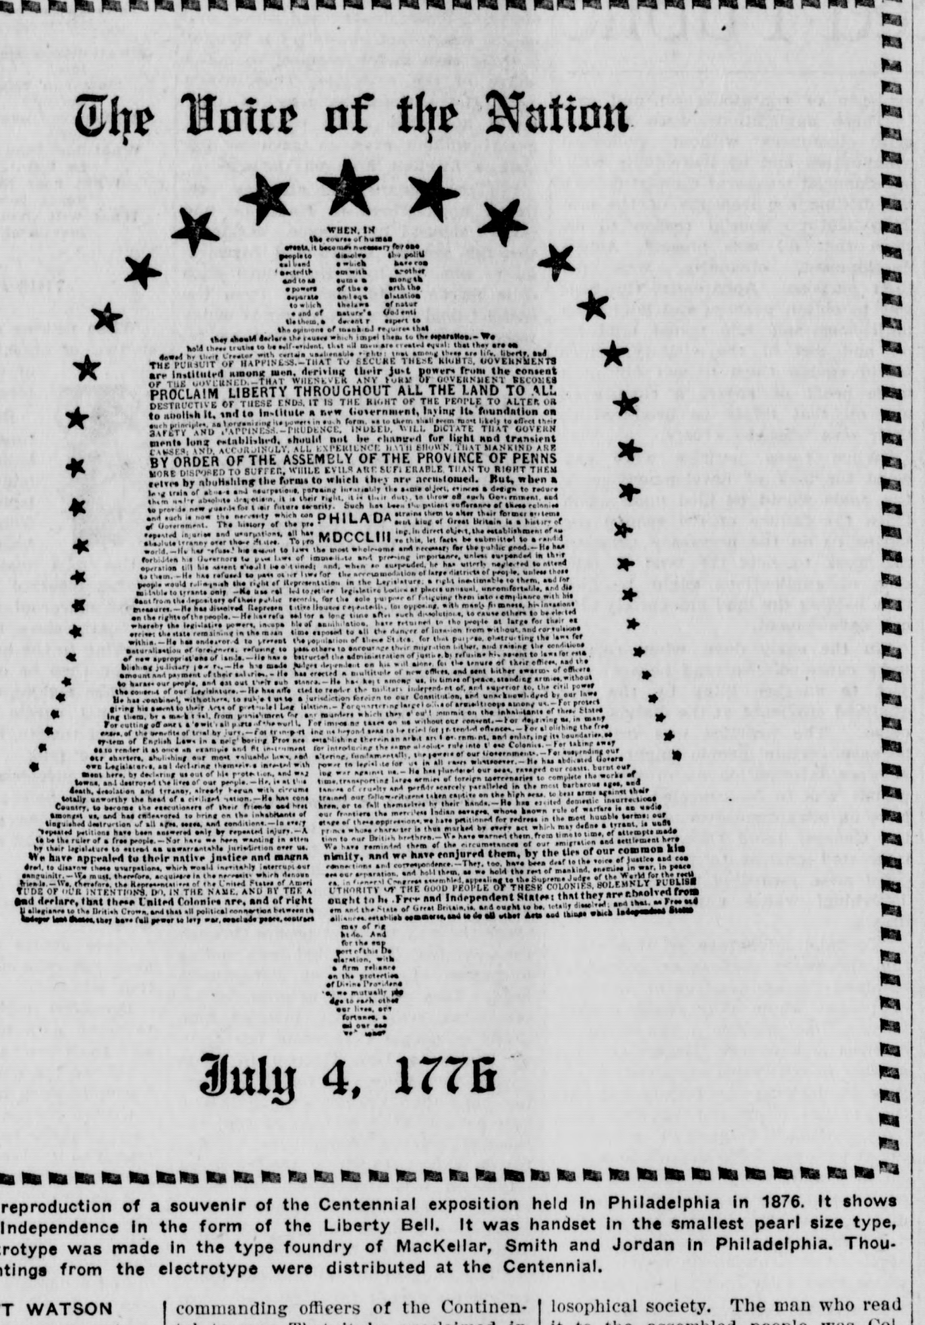
A $192,000 building program at the United States Veterans' Hospital near Palo Alto has been undertaken. Five new buildings are to be constructed, which will replace the last of the frame buildings. These include a two story attendants' quarters building, an occupational therapy building, a garage and machine shop building, one married personnel building and two married personnel quarters.

The tri-state conference on the Boulder Dam project resumed its deliberations in an endeavor to reach some basis of agreement on the proposal submitted by Fred C. Wilson of New Mexico, vice chairman of the conference, and L. Ward Bannister of Denver, as to the division of water apportioned to the lower basin by the Colorado River compact. John L. Bacon, chairman of the California commission, said California needs 7,200,000 acre feet of water annually. Under a "setup" proposed, California would get 5,572,000 acre feet, and of this 1,000,000 acre feet would go to the metropolitan water district. "Of course we shall never get 7,200,000 acre feet annually," said Bacon, "because the water isn't there." John Mason Ross, counsel for the Arizona commission, again objected to the Gila River being included in the Colorado River compact.

Completion of the widening and reconstruction of the Redwood highway in the neighborhood of Cotati, midway between Santa Rosa and Petaluma, will be celebrated soon by the breaking of a barrier by motor caravans representing Sonoma county communities.

Establishment of a hospital in Pittsburg was assured following a conference with Dr. H. E. Peters and Mrs. R. T. Sather of Hollywood. According to Mrs. Sather, plans and specifications are ready and await only the finding of a suitable location. The hospital would cost $75,000.

"Proclaim Liberty Throughout All the Land--"



The above is a reproduction of a souvenir of the Centennial exposition held in Philadelphia in 1876. It shows the Declaration of Independence in the form of the Liberty Bell. It was handset in the smallest pearl size type, from which an electrotype was made in the type foundry of MacKellar, Smith and Jordan in Philadelphia. Thousands of these printings from the electrotype were distributed at the Centennial.

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

ASK the average American what took place on July 4, 1776, and he will probably reply in some such words as these: "Why, the Declaration of Independence, which made us free from England was written by Thomas Jefferson and signed by John Hancock, George Washington, and some others. Then in celebration of the event they rang the Liberty bell until it cracked wide open." And that represents pretty well the sum of the misinformation which many of us have upon the historic event from which we date the beginning of our nation.

In contrast to this misinformation, consider these simple chronological facts in regard to the making of the Declaration of Independence and Proclaiming of Liberty:

On June 7, 1776, Richard Henry Lee, delegate to the Second Continental Congress from Virginia, acting under his instructions from that colony, presented a resolution declaring that "these United Colonies are, and of right ought to be, free and independent states." This resolution was debated in congress for nearly a month and a vote on it was deliberately deferred until it seemed certain that the restrictions placed upon delegates from other colonies would be so modified that there would be a unanimous or almost unanimous approval of the resolution when it was put to a vote in congress.

On July 2, 1776, Lee's resolution was put to a vote and approved by the delegates of twelve of the colonies. The only silent voice was that of the New York delegation. The Declaration was penned by Thomas Jefferson and offered to congress, sitting as a committee of the whole, for revision before its adoption.

On July 4, 1776, the Declaration of Independence, as revised, was adopted by the delegates from the colonies with the exception of the New York representatives. The men who had voted for the Declaration of Independence realized that it would be nothing more than a scrap of paper unless it received popular support and received it immediately. So arrangements were made at once to have the document put before the public in the form of a broadside. Therefore, after recording the vote on the main question, it was "Ordered, That the Declaration be authenticated and printed; That the Commmittee appointed to prepare the Declaration, superintend and correct the press, That copies of the Declaration be sent to the several Assemblies, Conventions and Committees, or Councils of Safety, and to the several commanding officers of the Continental troops; That it be proclaimed in each of the United States and at the head of the Army."

It was late in the afternoon of Thursday, July 4, when this action was taken, so the committee, composed of Thomas Jefferson, John Adams and Benjamin Franklin immediately hastened from the state house on Chestnut street, in Philadelphia, to a little building on High street, where Dunlap and Claypoole conducted a print shop. These printers were prepared to do "rush jobs." They had put out broadsides immediately after the Battles of Lexington, Bunker Hill, and upon receipt of the news of the disasters at Ticonderoga and Quebec. So they at once set to work and gave their personal attention to the setting in type of this greatest of all documents, which had fallen to their lot to print. Since the printing of it had to have official supervision, Jefferson, Adams and Franklin stayed in the shop until the Declaration was set in type and the first proof of it was pulled. They then made corrections on this proof, (the major responsibility for catching any errors resting on Franklin, no doubt, since he was a practical printer) and remained in the shop until this Magna Charta of American liberties had been placed on the old flat hand-press and was being printed.

On July 5, 1776, when congress met again, a supply of these printed copies of the Declaration were on hand, and one of them was "wafered" in the blank space left for it in the rough "Journal of Congress" before the reading of the minutes of the preceding day took place. In the meantime letters transmitting the Declaration to the various assemblies had been prepared by John Hancock, president of congress, his signature attested to by Charles Thompson, secretary, and some of these were printed on July 5 and the remainder some days later. The first one was sent to the Committee of Safety of Pennsylvania, dated July 5 and delivered to the committee on July 6. The committee decided to promulgate the Declaration on the following Monday, July 8, since elections for membership in the new convention were to be held throughout the state on that day and would furnish a better opportunity than usual to secure a large public attendance to hear the reading of this important document.

On July 8, the Declaration of Independence was first proclaimed to the citizens of the United States from the balcony of an observatory attached to the building in the state house yard which occupied the site of what is now the home of the American Philosophical society. The man who read it to the assembled people was Col. John Nixon, formerly an alderman in Philadelphia and commander of a regiment in the Continental army at the battle of Long Island and at Valley Forge. He acted for the sheriff who would by right have read it.

The reading of the Declaration was received with much enthusiasm by the Philadelphians. It is true that the Liberty bell in the state house steeple (that bell whose makers had placed upon it the prophetic inscription "Proclaim Liberty throughout all the Land unto all the inhabitants thereof," when it had been cast some twenty-three years before), was rung at this time—to call the Philadelphians together for the reading of the Declaration and to celebrate the occasion after they had received the news. But the cracking of the bell did not take place at this time. That occurrred exactly 59 years later while it was being tolled for the death of Chief Justice John Marshall, which took place July 8, 1835. Other bells chimed in the chorus, bonfires were lit that evening and all in all it was one of the most memorable days in the history of the historic City of Brotherly Love.

Although the first official proclamation of the Declaration of Independence took place on July 8, in Independence Square, this was not the first knowledge which the public had of the great news which it contained. For on Saturday, July 6, the Pennsylvania Evening Post, "published every Tuesday and Saturday evenings" at a "price only two coppers" devoted the entire front page of its issue for that date to the publication of the Declaration. On July 8, Dunlap and Claypoole also published it in their weekly, the Pennsylvania Packet, and within the next week or so it had been published in nearly all of the Colonial newspapers, as well as having been proclaimed in various places by the assemblies, councils of safety and the like, for post riders were carrying some of Dunlap and Claypoole's printed copies throughout the newly-created nation. In Massachusetts where the struggle for liberty had begun, it was first proclaimed on July 14, 1776, and the interesting fact is that it did not take place in Boston. For, according to a contemporary account, "at about noon on Sunday (July 14) a messenger on his way to Boston stopped at one of the taverns on Main street (Worcester) for dinner for himself and team. While waiting for his team to eat and rest he was met by Isaiah Thomas, who obtained from him a copy of the Declaration which he took to the church and read from the porch."

Wanted Real Service

Not every one has so clear a conception of the duties of a public service commission as the Baltimore woman who rang up the Maryland department of public service one day and inquired for the service engineer.

"May I leave my baby in your office for a while? I want to go down town and do some shopping!"

"Why, you must have the wrong number!" the man gasped. "This is the public service commission office!"

"Well, I know that," was the quick answer, "and if you don't consider it a public service to take care of a baby once in a while I think you'd better change your name until you can begin giving real public service!" And she rang off.

LISKA HAILED AS BEST YOUNGSTER

Submarine Hurler Favored to Win Out.

The season has been under way long enough to offer the conclusion that Ad Liska, the twenty-two-year old submarine chukker with the Washington Americans, isn't destined to have the tag "bloomer" fastened on him. On the contrary, Liska seems well on his way to earning the distinction of being the best young pitcher to reach the majors this season.

Manager Walter Johnson, one of the greatest pitchers baseball ever has known, boosted Liska.

"He has impressed me more than any youngster I have seen in years," he commented.

It has come to pass that no one was wrong. Or, at least, isn't yet. Liska has pitched almost perfect ball for Washington. One of his games was a two-hit affair against Cleveland. He lost that, and was credited with losses in the two other games, because the Washingtons made only one run for him in them.

Bill McGowan, veteran American league umpire, was roaring gleefully about Liska after the two-hit game in Cleveland. McGowan officiated at the game.

"That kid has one of the most puzzling deliveries I ever have seen," he said. "It is hard to get next to.

"It's a lot different from the way Carl Mays pitches. Mays sweeps very low in his swing and a batter can follow the ball easily as he seems to hesitate just a little at the bottom of the swing and then push it in there. Not like Liska. He whips the ball. He doesn't swing low and he hides that ball so nicely that a batter can't see it until it is almost up to the plate. I sweeps up and hops.

"Joe Sewell has just about the best pair of eyes in baseball. And those eyes, and the fact that he crowds the plate and is a little fellow, make him hard to pitch to. But Sewell, as well as the other players, was topping 'em. The infielders get plenty of work when Liska works.

"Liska looks like a great pitcher. His delivery has a nice hop and is a fast one. His curve isn't so bad, either. If he keeps hiding that ball the way he did against Cleveland, no club will beat him easily."

Long Stay for Moakley

Jack Moakley has completed his thirtieth year as track coach at Cornell, with a record of winning 82 out of 128 contests in cross-country and track meets.

Moakley, who has been at Cornell since 1899, has coached nine Cornell teams that won the intercollegiate track championships and seventeen teams that placed first in the cross-country championships.

The Cornell coach was a great athlete in his day, starring in sprint and distance events and the low hurdles.

The Way the Wind Blew

By C. MACKIE

(Copyright.)

"THE wind," observed Mr. Harold Monsonby, as he mounted the marble steps of the Scansby mansion, "is fair—south or southwest, I should say!"

A pallid butler opened the door.

"Miss Scansby is in the garden, sir," the man announced. "They are having tea under the beeches, sir."

The young man followed the pompous figure out of the house,across the wide green lawns, around to the beech trees, spreading their coppery foliage under the hot sun. Monsonby quivered when he saw the girl who sat under them pouring tea.

"So glad to see you, Mr. Monsonby," she called gaily. "I've just been hoping you would come around this afternoon—you know Mr. Youngs, I am sure. One lump or two?"

Mr. Monsonby had every reason in the world to hate Bill Youngs. They had been classmates at college and as Bill had always kept about three jumps ahead of Harold Monsonby, the latter felt a vague premonition of evil when he found the "handsome stranger" drinking tea alone with Ethel Scansby. He was never one to be diffident.

"I'll outstay him," Harold determined, picking out a nutty little cake and nibbling it. "Wind seems to be in the east," he said aloud.

"East!" scoffed Youngs, "why, the wind is south and the sky is blue—what more could one ask?" His brown eyes sought Miss Scansby's

"I am wondering," she trilled sweetly. "Now, Harold, do tell me what is the matter with you today? You look positively gloomy!"

Harold Monsonby aroused himself and smiled at her. "Really, Ethel, I am feeling fine—only I happened to be thinking of something important just then—somebody tell me who won the Cloverleigh match."

"Bigsby," announced Youngs abruptly.

"Good fellow, old Bigsby," muttered Harold.

"Pretty good," yawned Youngs. "Of course you are not surprised to hear that this same Bigsby used to be my caddy."

Ethel Scansby smiled indulgently.

"That must have been a wonderful help to him," she murmured.

"Nasty dig for Bill," chuckled Monsonby, softly stroking his taffy-colored hair.

"I feel a cold breeze," complained Bill Youngs, "never noticed it until a few minutes ago—funny, eh? Must be the wind's in the north, eh?"

"Wind is south," contented Monsonby complacently, settling back in the chair while a man servant removed the tea equipage.

"How do you know?" asked Ethel idly.

"My feelings—with me, 'all's well with the world' and all that, you know."

"You must be in love," exploded Bill suddenly. "Must be that pretty Jinksby girl the other night."

"Where?" demanded Harold coldly.

"At the Jinksbys' place, Tuesday night."

"I was not there," lied Harold calmly.

"Neither was I," confessed Bill urbanely, "but the newspaper had both our names in the guest list!"

"Please do not be so silly," protested Ethel Scansby. "You know very well that I danced with both of you at the Jinksby's affair—and as for Stella Jinksby—of course everybody knows that she's engaged to Jim Baffton."

"Good fellow, Jim," said Monsonby hardily.

"Oh, he's just a darling," burst out Ethel.

"What do you like best about him?" queried Bill Youngs.

"About Jim?" Ethel's eyes sparkled and then suddenly became very shy and downcast. "Guess what I like best about him?"

"Why—oh, because he's a big brawny fellow, with lots of money and a good sport," said Bill Youngs promptly, flexing his heavy arms.

"And you, Mr. Monsonby? Why do you think I admire Jim Baffton?" asked Miss Scansby.

Harold smiled grimly at Bill Youngs. "Perhaps you prefer him because he is of gentle blood, fair skinned and fair minded," he said boldly.

"How funny you are—both of you—" her laughter chimed sweetly. "The only reason that I like Jim Baffton is because he is going to marry Stella Jinksby!"

The two of them sat there, listening to her happy laughter, each of them madly in love with her, and neither one offering to leave.

"Won't you stay for dinner?" asked Ethel after a while.

They shot up together and made their farewells.

"Wait a moment," said Ethel, rising and standing before them like some lovely culprit. "I must tell you both now—you are such good friends of mine—my engagement will be announced in a few days—some one you both know—Ralph Bigsby!"

"You mean the one who won the Cloverleigh match?" gasped Bill Youngs.

"Yes," smiled Ethel. "Used to be your caddy, remember?"

As the sun dropped behind the trees, the copper beeches took on their dress of somber bronze, and the departing suitors looked back once and saw the girl standing there, a slim, white figure.

Laymen Not Doing Their Full Duty in the Work of the Church

By LEON C. PALMER, Secretary Brotherhood of St. Andrew.

THE laymen of the church today constitute our greatest undeveloped resources. They are not working as they should. It takes 111 Episcopalians a whole year to bring one person into the church if latest statistics are correct. Ninety per cent of the church work is done as a rule by 10 per cent of the members. Our real problem is employing the unemployed, getting idle Christians and nominal members to accept personal responsibility for definite Christian service.

Thousands of Christians today have a merely negative religion, a futile piety. They are good, but good for nothing. They are nonentities so far as definite service to the church is concerned. We join in singing the great martial hymns, "Onward, Christian Soldiers," "Ye Soldiers of the Cross," etc., but too often it is not a church army going forth to battle but like a hospital with a large number of patients and a few overworked nurses. Many rectors are kept so busy nursing the sick Christians that they have no time left for going out into the highways and hedges to constrain others to come in.

Our churchmen are inclined to say, "Let George do it," George being the rector. We have looked upon our clergy as men whom we have employed and pay to do our religious work for us, just as we employ a stenographer or file clerk, a policeman or janitor.

The church is not growing as it should. This applies to practically all Christian bodies. Latest statistics show that nearly one-third of the parishes and congregations of the four largest Protestant bodies reported not a single conversion during the last year. Lay Evangelism is today the greatest need of the church as a solution for this situation.

Country Must Be Aroused to Cope With the Menace of Organized Crime

By JUDGE GILBERT, Georgia Supreme Court.

Organized crime is the biggest business in America, and costs the country annually $16,000,000,000—more than enough to pay back the money America lent European nations during the World war. There may be cited the most familiar instances of crime in high places—national oil scandals, impeachment of governors and the conviction of governors for criminal practices, and embezzlement, graft and fraud among the municipal authorities in several of the country's largest cities.

Democracy itself is on fire and remains to prove that it can live as a means of government. This condition is the Augean stables of modern American life, to be purified only by public opinion enlightened by facts.

There is lack of respect for authority in the home and in courts, and the automobile, a necessity in modern life, is the most powerful aid to lawlessness, since it affords the criminal a quick getaway. There should be a system whereby drivers may be identified and properly controlled.

Some of the efforts necessary to check crime include study of all workable methods of prevention by removal of cause and opportunity; apprehension of criminals, especially through establishment of a bureau of criminal identification; practical application of doctrine of speedy trials; co-operation with agencies for reclamation and reform of ex-convicts; aid through laymen, in the church and out, by giving the general public realization of the terrible menace now existing.

Stressing Need of External Things Draws Soul Near to Danger Line

By DR. HALVORD E. LUCCOCK, Yale Divinity School

The chief trouble with America today is not so much commercialism and materialism, despite the remarks of foreign lecturers and writers, but externalism—the habit of thinking too much of the outside world and not enough of the spirit. It is this current American feeling of reverence for external bigness that is our biggest fault.

The first lesson of Jesus in the curriculum of life is to keep from being smothered in a multitude of external things. Do not let the spirit be crowded out by over-emphasis on the life about us.

Life, it seems, has become a parade down a vast street of brilliantly lighted show-windows filled with thousands of articles, each crying out their necessity to our happiness, and ready to spring at us. How can we even approximate what used to be called the simple life when apparently there is such an increase in the number of things we must have to get along? How can we maintain an inner light in this constant parade?

We are not only urged to buy, but our pride and vanity is appealed to and our envy is aroused in the modern advertisements which urge us to get ahead of our fellows, to own something better than our neighbors. Pride and envy and all things that are in deadly opposition to the spirit of Jesus seem to be the basis of it all. There is a danger to our souls in putting too much stress on the clutter of outside things. Fortify yourself against an inner emptiness with an outer fullness. Have something inside yourself to show to God.

Fads in Medicine and Billboard Advertising Call for Condemnation

By DR. RIDGE, President Missouri State Medical Society.

Physicians must present a united front against fads and the presentation in the press of stories of incomplete and unverified medical discoveries.

Medical students should spend two summers during their school work assisting rural practitioners. Nominal wages would be paid the students. School credit, the equivalent of that given an interne for a year's work in a hospital, would be granted.

The lay press is anxious to print anything of a sensational nature. Charlatans will twist anything to their own ends. There are the cash register uplift movements, that try to gain indorsement of medical societies. Often it is given and a heavy expense of salaried organizers is foisted on the public.

In spite of the many millions spent by the Society for the Control of Tuberculosis in posting billboards all over the country, warning against the disease, in making examinations, and in giving talks, the last report showed no decrease in the death rate, but rather an increase.

If all this money had been put into a fund for treatment and care of tubercular patients, many would have been saved and the death rate would have been lowered.

There should be a co-operative widows' fund among organized medical men. The average doctor's widow does not know where to get the money to pay his funeral expenses.

KARENS of BURMA

Bre Girls of the Burma Highlands.

(Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)

ALTHOUGH the majority of the Burmese have a well-developed civilization, there are hill tribes in Burma whose members are strikingly primitive. Most of them are classed as Red or White Karens.

In the old days the Red Karen never went out without dha (sword) and gun, and in addition had a small sheaf of spears or rather javelins. Now, the guns remain at home, only to be used when there is a death in the village. They are fired then to scare away the disembodied spirit.

All the dead are looked upon as evil-minded or, at all events, malevolent characters, best driven away.

The Karen spears have vanished so completely that the hunter after curios has difficulty in getting them. They are of a very distinctive character, sharpened on one side only, like a knife-blade, with a male bamboo shaft that had a spike at the butt, so that the owner could stick it in the ground when he was hoeing his fields or cutting his crops, and be ready for any stranger.

But the Red Karen remains a heavy drinker. Early prospectors for teak forests used to say that a genuine Karen-ni never went abroad without taking a bamboo on his back, from which a tube led to his mouth. Apparently they could carry their liquor then, inside and out.

In addition to their liking for spirits from the still, the Red Karens are devotees of the spirits of the air, the flood and the fell. Latterly a few have become nominal Buddhists, and some have even founded monasteries and built pagodas, but none of them give up their belief in nats, to use the Burmese word for spirits.

Ornaments of Brass.

The Karen's idea of ornamentation seems to Western eyes to make for anything but comfort. They wear great coils of brass wire and brass rods on their arms and legs. The length of these coils seems only limited by the space available or the ability of the household to pay for the rod, for brass is very expensive.

The total weight carried by the average woman is 50 or 60 pounds, and here and there some manage as much as 70 or even 80.

Burdened with this weight, they hoe the fields, carry water for domestic use, and go long distances to village markets to sell liquor. They brew a great deal of very fiery stuff and sell it to most of their neighbors, carrying it in flagons made of woven strips of bamboo lacquered over with wood-oil, and dispensed in goblets of the same manufacture. The cups are of most generous size. They hold about half a pint, and those not trained to it usually become noisy after one.

The brass-collar fashion does not seem to affect the women's health. There are plenty of active old crones among them and families of eight or ten are quite common. The only noticeable effect is that the women speak as if some one had them tight around the neck. They wear colored scarfs twisted into the hair, jumper coats which slip over the head, have a fashionable V-shaped front and back, and very short sleeves, with occasionally a little embroidery.

The skirts are like kilts, stopping above the knee and striped red and blue. The necklaces are of the usual kind, with cornelians and other stones, coins and beads.

The men are not nearly so picturesque. Near main trade routes they wear the baggy trousers and short coats of the Shans. The remote villagers wear shorts and cane leggings. An attempt at decoration is seen in the anklets made of shirt buttons and kaleik seeds (the white seeds of a herbaceous plant), and every man carries a powder-and-shot case strapped to his belt. These are of wickerwork, neatly embroidered with brass bosses and raised scrollwork, and they glitter with wood-oil varnish.

One Clan of Good Farmers.

The Kekawngdu clan occupies a tract covering, perhaps, 150 square miles. They are zealous agriculturists. Every available nook of the valley is terraced for irrigation, which is carried out with great skill and eye for contour. They grow a good deal of cotton and make their clothes of it. The average height of their country is between 3,000 and 4,000 feet, with peaks rising to 5,000. Their roads are well aligned, fairly broad, and much used, and are considered very good by those who have traveled over hill-roads, though a bicycle would have to be carried for three miles in every four.

Pack bullocks are kept and caravans go down to Toungoo on the railway. On the whole, they may be said to be the best of the hill races in this neighborhood, and they have great game drives with trained dogs.

Some authorities have doubts as to whether they are Karens and want to place them in the Mon-hkmer group. Their language, however, has many similarities with Taungthu.

Some distance to the north of the Padaung country—with the small Red Karen State of Nawngpalai intervening—is the Bre tract.

Their country is of a different character from that of the Padaungs. It is a much more emphatic jumble of hills, very high and steep, with exceedingly narrow valleys in between.

The dress of the Bre men is more distinctive than that of the Padaungs. They wear a pair of very short trousers, striped red and white, and tied at the waist with a bit of string. A blanket of coarse cotton serves for a coat, and their long black hair is tied into a knot, just over the right temple, and the rest, apparently never combed, hangs over the shoulders and face. On their legs they wear cotton circlets below the knee, with brass rings to keep the coils apart. Many of them also wear necklets or torques of brass.

The dress of the women varies for the three groups, but the differences are not great. The chief garment is a gaberdine called thindaing by the Burmese, perhaps more like a poncho, since it is slipped over the head, and has either rudimentary sleeves or none at all. They also wear a short kirtle which reaches within a hand's breadth of the knee, but some dispense with this. It is red and blue in stripes.

Decorations of the Bre People.

The women in the northern section of the Bre tract have brass tubing coiled round the leg from the ankle to the knee, and from above the knee to half way up the thigh. The southern Bre women have to content themselves with cotton coils instead of brass. Both wear large brass hooks or torques round the neck, and enormous ear-plugs are fixed through the lobes of the ears.

They have no head-dress, and their hair, which is unkempt as that of the men, is tied in a knot at the back of the head. They marry very early—the girls at about thirteen, the youths at fifteen wears of age.

It is an easy matter to determine whether or not a man has a wife. The unmarried wear pebble necklaces which have been handed down from father to son for generations. Some of them are valued at 50 rupees, which is wealth for these hills.

Besides these, large brass rings encircle the man's neck, hang from the ears, and are inserted in the cotton garters on his legs. The northern Bre bachelor adds to these ornaments a twisted bamboo band round the head, studded with mother-of-pearl shirt-buttons or small red and green beads, as a sort of setting to the shards of large green beetles.

All this finery goes to the wife when he gets one, and as a husband he is reduced to a pair of trousers, a blanket, and some unornamented black rings around his legs. A rudely carved wooden comb sometimes remains fixed in his top knot as an ornament, not for use.

Both sexes stain their teeth black, using for the purpose the leaves of a tree which the Bre call Thupo, mixed with lime-juice.

The rest of the Karen tribesmen of these hills form much smaller groups, but they all have their distinctive patois, due, no doubt, to the detestably rugged character of the country

Excellent Reason for Welcoming New Baby

Everyone had a good laugh during tea at Annandale the other day when a socially prominent young matron made her first appearance since the advent of the family son and heir. She brought her five-year-old daughter.

Conversation naturally turned to the new baby and finally some one said to the little girl:

"And what do you think of your little baby brother?"

To which sophisticated Young America promptly replied:

"I'm glad it was a boy 'cause daddy was getting sort of sissified with just mother and me around."—Los Angeles Times.

Money From Cotton

When James Coats began to make thread in the little town of Fergusiie, Paisley, Scotland, 104 years ago, few could have realized the enormous profits that would accrue to the family. Nine "cotton kings," headed by Lord Glentanar, who left an estate valued at £4,624,263, died millionaires, and the recent death of Mrs. Coats-Boyd, who left £748,118, brings the total to £21,295,274 for ten members of the family. Of this amazing sum amassed from the sale of reels of cotton, the state has claimed £5,104,528 in death duties.—Montreal Family Herald.

STORY FROM THE START

Athol Meldrum, young Scotsman who tells the story leaves his mother and brother, Garry, to seek his fortune. At San Francisco, practically penniless, he takes a laborer's job, and meets a fellow adventurer whom he dubs, the Prodigal. The Prodigal is anxious to join the rush of gold seekers into Alaska, and Meldrum agrees to go with him after he (the Prodigal) comes back from a visit to his wealthy father in the East. Athol, in great need, is befriended by Jim Hubbard ("Salvation Jim"). When the Prodigal returns, the three men join the stampede into the Frozen North. On the boat is a young girl obviously out of place. She is traveling with her grandfather and a hard-looking couple named Winklestein who figure as her uncle and aunt. Athol has an opportunity to befriend her, and she tells him a sad story of her life. She is journeying into Alaska to take care of her grandfather, who is obsessed with the idea of getting rich in Klondike. Her name, she tells him, is Berna. Landing at Skagway, Athol's party at once takes the trail.

"Good job you didn't hit him worse."

"Wait a while, sonny, wait a while. There's something mighty familiar about Jake Mosher. He's mighty like a certain Sam Mosely I'm interested in. I've just written a letter outside to see, an' if its' him—well, I'm saved; I'm a good Christian, but—God help him!"

"And who was Sam Mosely, Jim?"

"Sam Mosely? Sam Mosely was the skunk that busted up my home an' stole my wife, blast him!"

• • • • • • • •

Day after day, each man of us poured out on the trail the last heel-tap of his strength, and the coming of night found us utterly played out. Salvation Jim was full of device and resource, the Prodigal, a dynamo of eager energy; but it was the Jam-wagon who proved his mettle in a magnificent and relentless way. Brian Wanless his name, a world tramp, a derelict of the Seven seas. He must once have been a magnificent fellow, and even now, with strength and willpower impaired, he was a man among men, full of quick courage and of a haughty temper. It was ever a word and a blow with him, and a fight to the desperate finish.

Though taciturn and morose with men, the Jam-wagon showed a tireless affection for animals. From the first he took charge of our ox; but it was for horses his fondness was most expressed, so that on the trail, where there was so much cruelty, he was constantly on the verge of combat.

"That's a great man," said The Prodigal to me, "a fighter from heel to head. There's one he can't fight, though, and that's old man Booze."

One day we were making a trip with a load of our stuff when, just ahead, there was a check in the march, so I and the Jam-wagon went forward to investigate. It was our old friend Bullhammer in difficulties. He had rather a fine horse, and in passing a sump-hole, his sled had skidded and slipped downhill into the water. Now he was belaboring the animal unmercifully, acting like a crazy man, shouting in a frenzy of rage.

The horse was making the most gallant efforts I ever saw, but, with every fresh attempt, its strength weakened. Time and again it came down on its knees, which were raw and bleeding. It was shining with sweat so that there was not a dry hair on its body, and if ever a dumb brute's eyes spoke of agony and fear, that horse's did. But Bullhammer grew every moment more infuriated, wrenching its mouth and beating it over the head with a club. It was a sickening sight and, used as I was to the inhumanity of the trail, I would have interfered had not the Jam-wagon jumped in. He was deadly pale and his eyes burned.

"You infernal brute! If you strike that horse another blow, I'll break your club over your shoulders."

Bullhammer turned on him. Surprize paralyzed the man, rage choked him. They were both big husky fellows, and they drew up face to face. Then Bullhammer spoke.

"Curse you, anyway. Don't interfere with me. I'll beat bloody h—l out of the horse if I like, an' you won't say one word, see?"

With that he struck the horse another vicious blow on the head. There was a quick scuffle. The club was wrenched from Bullhammer's hand. I saw it come down twice. The man sprawled on his back, while over him stood the Jam-wagon, looking very grim. The horse slipped quietly back into the water.

"You ugly blackguard! I've a good mind to beat you within an ace of your life. But you're not worth it."

He gave Bullhammer a kick. The man got on his feet. He was a coward, but his pig eyes squinted in impotent rage. He looked at his horse lying shivering in the icy water.

"Get the horse out yourself, then, curse you. Do what you please with him. But, mark you—I'll get even with you for this—I'll—get—even."

He shook his fist and, with an ugly oath, went away. The block in the traffic was relieved. The trail was again in motion. When we got abreast of the submerged horse, we hitched on the ox and hastily pulled it out, and (the Jam-wagon proving to have no little veterinary skill) in a few days it was fit to work again.

• • • • • • • •

Another week had gone and we were still on the trail, between the head of the canyon and the summit of the Pass. Day after day was the same round of unflinching effort, under conditions that would daunt any but the stoutest hearts. "Klondike or bust," was the slogan. It was ever on the lips of those bearded men. "Klondike or bust"—the strong man, with infinite patience, righted his overturned sleigh, and in the face of the blinding blizzard, pushed on through the clogging snow. "Klondike or bust"—the weary, trail-worn one raised himself from the hole where he had fallen, and stiff, cold, racked with pain, gritted his teeth doggedly and staggered on a few feet more. "Klondike or bust"—the fanatic of the trail, crazed with the gold-lust, performed mad feats of endurance, till nature rebelled, and raving and howling, he was carried away to die.

"Klondike or Bust," was the Slogan.

• • • • • • • •

We were camping in Paradise valley. Before us and behind us the great Cheechako army labored along with infinite travail. We had suffered, but the trail of the land was near its end. And what an end! With every mile the misery and difficulty of the way seemed to increase. Then we came to the trail of Rotting Horses.

Dead animals we had seen all along the trail in great numbers, but the sight as we came on this particular place beggared description. There were thousands of them. One night we dragged away six of them before we could find room to put up the tent. There they lay, sprawling horribly, their ribs protruding through their hides, their eyes putrid in the sunshine. It was like a battlefield, hauntingly hideous.

It was a Sunday and we were in the tent, indescribably glad of a day's rest. The Jam-wagon was mending a bit of harness; the Prodigal was playing solitaire. Salvation Jim had just returned from a trip to Skagway, where he had hoped to find a letter from the outside regarding one Jake Mosher. His usually hale and kindly face was drawn and troubled.

"I always did say there was God's curse on this Klondike gold," he said; "now I'm sure of it. There's a hoodoo on it. What it's a-goin' to cost, what hearts it's goin' to break, what homes it's goin' to wreck no man'll ever know. God only knows what it's cost already. But this last is the worst yet."

"What's the matter, Jim?" I said; "what last?"

"Why, haven't you heard? Well, there's just been a snowslide on the Chilcoot an' several hundred people buried. Hundreds of poor sinners cut off without a chance to repent."

He was going to improve on the occasion when the Prodigal cut in.

"Poor devils! I guess we must know some of them, too." He turned to me. "I wonder if your little Polak friend's all right?"

Indeed my thoughts had just flown to Berna. Among the exigencies of the trail (when we had to fix our minds on the trouble of the moment and every moment had its trouble) there was little time for reflection. Nevertheless, I had found at all times visions of her flitting before me, thoughts of her coming to me when I least expected them. Pity, tenderness and a good deal of anxiety were in my mind. I suppose I was silent, grave, and it must have been some intuition of my thoughts that made the Prodigal say to me:

"Say, old man, if you would like to take a run over the Dyea trail, I guess I can spare you for a day or so."

"Yes, indeed, I'd like to see the trail."

"Oh, yes, we've observed your enthusiastic interest in trails. Why don't you marry the girl? Well, cut along, old chap. Don't be gone too long."

So next morning, traveling as lightly as possible, I started for Bennett.

I was jogging along past the advance guard of the oncoming army, when who should I see but Mervin and Hewson. They looked thoroughly seasoned, and had made record time with a large outfit. In contrast to the worn, weary-eyed men with faces pinched and puckered, they looked insolently fit and full of fight. They had heard of the snowslide but could give me no particulars. I inquired for Berna and the old man. They were somewhere behind, between Chilcoot and Lindeman. "Yes, they were probably buried under the slide. Good-by."

I hurried forward, full of apprehension. A black stream of Cheechakos were surging across Lindeman; then I realized the greatness of the other advancing army, and the vastness of the impulse that was urging these indomitable atoms to the North. It was blowing quite hard and many had put up sails on their sleds with good effect.

Why was I so anxious about Berna? I did not know, but with every mile my anxiety increased. A dim unreasoning fear possessed me. I imagined that if anything happened to her I would forever blame myself. I hurried forward.

I met the Twins. They had just escaped the slide, they told me, and had not yet recovered from the shock. A little way back on the trail it was. I would see men digging out the bodies. They had dug out seventeen that morning. Some were crushed as flat as pancakes.

Again, with a pain at my heart, I asked after Berna and her grandfather. Twin number one said they were both buried under the slide. I gasped and was seized with sudden faintness. "No," said twin number two, "the old man is missing, but the girl has escaped and is nearly crazy with grief. Good-by."

Once more I hurried on. Gangs of men were shoveling for the dead. Every now and then a shovel would strike a hand or a skull. Then a shout would be raised and the poor misshapen body turned out.

Again I put my inquiries. A busy digger paused in his work. "Yes, that must have been the old guy with the whiskers they dug out early on from the lower end of the slide. Relative, name of Winklestein, took charge of him. Took him to the tent yonder. Won't let anyone go near."

He pointed to a tent on the hillside, and it was with a heavy heart I went forward. The poor old man, so gentle, so dignified, with his dream of a golden treasure that might bring happiness to others. It was cruel, cruel . . .

"Say, what d'ye want here? Get to h—l outa this."

The words came with a snarl. I looked up in surprise.

There at the door of the tent, all a-bristle like a gutter-bred cur, was Winklestein.

I felt myself grow suddenly, savagely angry. I measured the man for a moment and determined I could handle him.

"I want," I said soberly, "to see the body of my old friend."

"You do, do you? Well, you darned well won't. Besides, there ain't no body here."

"You're a liar!" I observed. "But it's no use wasting words on you. I'm going on anyhow."

With that I gripped him suddenly and threw him sideways with some force. One of the tent ropes took away his feet violently, and there on the snow he sprawled, glowering at me with evil eyes.

"Now," said I, "I've got a gun, and if you try any monkey business, I'll fix you so quick you won't know what's happened."

The bluff worked. He gathered himself up and followed me into the tent, looking the picture of malevolent impotence. On the ground lay a longish object covered with a blanket. With a strange feeling of reluctant horror I lifted the covering. Beneath it lay the body of the old man.

He was lying on his back, and had not been squeezed out of all human semblance like so many of the others. Nevertheless, he was ghastly enough, with his bluish face and wide bulging eyes. I felt around his waist. Ha! the money belt was gone!

"Winklestein," I said, turning suddenly on the little Jew. "I was this dead man's friend. I'm still his granddaughter's friend. I'm going to see justice done. This man had two thousand dollars in a gold belt round his waist. It belongs to the girl now. You've got to give it up, Winklestein, or by—"

"Prove it, prove it!" he spluttered. "You're a liar; she's a liar; you're all a pack of liars, trying to blackmail a decent man. He had no money, I say!"

"Oh, you vile wretch!" I cried. I've a mind to choke your dirty throat. But I'll hound you till I make you cough up that money. Where's Berna?"

Suddenly he had become quietly malicious.

"Find her," he jibed; "find her for yourself. And take yourself out of my sight as quickly as you please."

I saw he had me over a barrel, so, with a parting threat, I left him. A tent nearby was being run as a restaurant, and there I had a cup of coffee. Of the man who kept it, a fat, humorous cockney, I made inquiries regarding the girl. Yes, he knew her. She was living in yonder tent with Madam Winklestein.

I thanked him, gulped down my coffee, and made for the tent. The flap was down, but I rapped on the canvas, and presently the dark face of Madam appeared. When she saw me, it grew darker.

"What d'you want?" she demanded.

"I want to see Berna," I said.

"Then you can't. Can't you hear her? Isn't that enough?"

Surely I could hear a very low, pitiful sound coming from the tent, something between a sob and a moan, like the wailing of an Indian woman over her dead, only infinitely subdued and anguished. I was shocked, awed, immeasurably grieved.

"Thank you," I said; "I'm sorry. I don't want to intrude on her in her hour of affliction. I'll come again."

"All right," she laughed tauntingly; "come again."

I had failed.

I slept at a bunkhouse that night, and next morning I again made a call at the tent within which lay Berna. Again Madam, in a gaudy wrapper, answered my call, but this time, to my surprise, she was quite pleasant.

"No," she said firmly, "you can't see the girl. She's all prostrated. We've given her a sleeping powder and she's asleep now. But she's mighty sick. We've sent for a doctor."

There was indeed nothing to be done. With a heavy heart I thanked her, expressed my regrets and went away. What had got into me, I wondered, that I was so distressed about the girl. I thought of her continually, with tenderness and longing. To me there was in her, beauty, charm, every ideal quality. Yet must my eyes have been anointed, for others passed her by without a second glance. Oh, I was young and foolish, maybe; but I had never before known a girl that appealed to me, and it was very, very sweet.

So I went back to the restaurant and gave the fat cockney a note which he promised to deliver into her own hands. I wrote:

"Dear Berna: I cannot tell you how deeply grieved I am over your grandfather's death, and how I sympathize with you in your sorrow. I came over from the other trail to see you, but you were too ill. Now I must go back at once. If I could only have said a word to comfort you!

"Oh, Berna, dear, go back, go back. This is no country for you. If I can help you, Berna, let me know. If you come on to Bennett, then I will see you.

"Believe me again, dear, my heart aches for you.

"Be brave.

"Always affectionately yours,
"ATHOL MELDRUM."

Then once more I struck out for Bennett.

Our last load was safely landed and the trail of the land was over. We had packed an outfit of four thousand pounds over a thirty-seven-mile trail and it had taken us nearly a month. For an average of fifteen hours a day we had worked for all that was in us; yet, looking back, it seems to have been more a matter of dogged persistence and patience than desperate endeavor and endurance.

Gratifying State of Bird Life in Florida

While there is no doubt that great damage was done to the bird life of the Everglades by hurricanes in Florida, it is encouraging to know, from a report made to the biological survey of the United States Department of Agriculture, that there are still numbers of beautiful plume birds in this region. An official recently made a trip through the Lake Okeechobee region and had an opportunity to witness a rare and beautiful sight, one that a bird lover might expect to see but once in a lifetime. At a point about ten miles east and north of Belle Glade, Palm Beach county, and as far as Pahokee, in all a distance of about 25 miles, there were thousands of American egrets and snowy egrets, stretching away as far as one could see. It was impossible to estimate the number of these beautiful birds. Within 100 yards of Belle Glade not less than 300 snowy egrets fed unmolested. While there seemed no reason for these birds gathering in such vast numbers in this territory, the sight was positive proof that the plume birds of Florida have benefited by the protection afforded them under the migratory bird treaty act.

Early Arithmetic Manual

Crocker's Arithmetic, the first complete manual for "numerists," was published September 3, 1677, by Sir Roger L'Estrange. The author, who died before it was published, became proverbial in England as a master of mathematical subjects. His book was a "best seller" for nearly a century.

New Ideas

Considering the struggle each new idea has to pass through, it is a wonder there is progress. Every new idea has to go through this barage of criticism: First, it is said that the idea is "absolutely impossible." Later it is said the idea is all right, except that it will never become practicable. Finally it is said the idea has gained considerable ground, but that it will take time to develop it. About 50 years later the critic reverses himself, and says, "Years ago I said it was a great idea." The big liar!—Atchison Globe.

THE FIREPLACE

It was really warm weather. Windows were left open, doors were left open.

People wore thin clothes. They went out without coats, without warm gloves, without big overshoes, without mufflers.

The fireplace was made up but it knew it would not be lighted. It might stay this way for days and days, even weeks and weeks. It did not know how long it might stay this way.

The paper and the kindlings were neatly arranged, the big log was at the back of the fireplace and the larger sticks of wood on top of the kindlings.

All one had to do was to light a match and the fire would be started.

But no one would light the fire in this warm weather. It was much too warm for a fire.

And the fireplace stayed very quiet; no crackling, no spouting, no sizzing, no warmth and no whispering going on.

So it was day after day.

And then along came a little cold snap. The fireplace wondered if it would now be left so still and stiff, so cold and all alone.

It wondered if it would not be lighted.

But evening came and no one spoke of the fire.

People put on light sweaters and acted as though they were a little bit cold, but they did not light the fire.

Then suddenly some one said:

"Why not have the fire? It's chilly and it would be so cheerful to have it."

"But it's really not the season for a fire," said another.

"That's true," said a third.

The fireplace was sad.

It thought it would not be lighted, and it wanted to give warmth this chilly weather and to make the people feel cozier.

Then still another person said:

"Well, even if it's not the season for it, it is cooler weather and it would be so pleasant to have a fire."

They all agreed to this, and then some one struck a match and the fire began.

How it crackled and danced and sang.

How it spouted and spurted and chuckled and chortled.

And how happy everyone was!

"There's nothing like an open fire," they all agreed.

"It was a good thing we did light it," another said.

"Yes, when the weather is chilly it is nice to have the fire—it takes the chill and dampness off everything and the warmth is such a pleasant warmth."

The fire in the fireplace heard these pleasing remarks and danced cheerily and gayly.

The sparks began to play hide and go seek with each other.

The blue fairies and the red fairies, the gold fairies, the amber fairies, the flame fairies and the green-blue fairies all came out and played with each other in the fire.

Oh, it was so gay in the fireplace, and the people were so pleased that they had decided to light the fire.

But the fire in the fireplace was particularly happy.

The waits between fires were so long during the warm weather and the fireplace felt rather dull at such times, so it was very glad of this little change and merriment.

And the people stayed up late that evening and talked and told stories before the fire, and as they told stories the fire sang the cheeriest of little sizzy songs.

Did you ever hear a sizzy song?

Maybe you will say that you haven't.

But next time you have a fire in the fireplace, wait until the brightness of the first part is over when the fireplace just settles down into being a slow, cozy fire, and then you will hear the singing of the sizzy songs.

They are the particular songs of the fireplace.

Mother Too Expensive

Little Dorothy, whose mother was a nurse, lived with her grandmother. She had often heard it told how much her mother received for her services.

One day Dorothy became ill and started to cry. When grandmother asked her what the trouble was, she said: "I'd like to have mother take care of me, but I guess we can't afford that."

When Food Sours

Lots of folks who think they have "indigestion" have only an acid condition which could be corrected in five or ten minutes. An effective anti-acid like Phillips Milk of Magnesia soon restores digestion to normal.

Phillips does away with all that sourness and gas right after meals. It prevents the distress so apt to occur two hours after eating. What a pleasant preparation to take! And how good it is for the system! Unlike a burning dose of soda—which is but temporary relief at best—Phillips Milk of Magnesia neutralizes many times its volume in acid.

Next time a hearty meal, or too rich a diet has brought on the least discomfort, try—

SO WEAK SHE COULDN'T WALK

Helped By Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Gretna, La.—"After my first child was born I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for a run-down condition. I could not walk across my room at times, I was so weak. A friend induced me to take the Vegetable Compound. Since that time I have also taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Herb Medicine and the Pills for Constipation, and I have used Lydia E. Pinkham's Sanative Wash. I am a housekeeper and I am still taking the Vegetable Compound as a tonic to enable me to do my work."—Mrs. E. F. VICKNAIR, 829 Hancock St., Gretna, La.
